

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction	1
I. THE WORLD OF PURE EXPERIENCE	9
1. The fundamental tenets of Radical Empiricism	10
2. The absolute sphere of pure experience	15
3. A comparison with Bergson	21
II. SENSATION, PERCEPTION, CONCEPTION	24
1. Knowledge by acquaintance and "knowledge about"	26
2. The recognition of sameness	28
3. The fringe structure of the stream of consciousness	32
4. The complementarity of perception and conception	35
5. Comparison between Husserl's epoché and James's return to pure experience	40
III. THE GENESIS OF SPACE AND TIME	47
1. The pre-reflective givenness of spatiality	47
2. The elaboration of spatial coordinates	50
3. Husserl's theory of horizons and James's fringes	53
4. The temporal structure of the stream of consciousness	57
5. The theory of the specious present	58
6. Primary and secondary remembrance	61
7. Husserl's analysis of the now-phase	62
8. Active and passive genesis	65
IV. THE STRUCTURE OF THE SELF: A THEORY OF PERSONAL IDENTITY	67
1. A functional view of consciousness	67
2. The empirical self	70
3. The pure ego	74
4. Husserl's distinction between the human ego and the pure phenomenological ego	81
5. The auto-constitution of the ego in temporality	84
6. The ambiguous situation of the body	86

V. INTERSUBJECTIVITY	90
1. Two inadequate solutions to the impasse of solipsism	90
2. Reference to a common spatial horizon	95
3. The problem of solipsism in the context of transcendental subjectivity	98
4. The coordination of alien spatial perspectives through imaginative variation	100
VI. THE THING AND ITS RELATIONS: A THEORY OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE PHYSICAL WORLD	103
1. The positing of thing-patterns within the stream of consciousness	103
2. The sense of reality	108
3. The various sub-universes of reality	111
4. The region of the "thing" as a guiding clue for phenomenological inquiry	118
5. The return to the concrete fullness of the life-world	123
VII. ATTENTION AND FREEDOM	129
1. The correlation between the focus-fringe structure of the object and the subjective modalities of attention and inattention	129
2. James's dependence upon the "reflex-arc" theory of human activity	138
3. The relationship between attention and freedom	143
4. Husserl's study of attention as an index of intentionality	149
5. The spontaneity of the ego's glance	151
6. James's pragmatic justification of the possibility of freedom	153
VIII. THE PRAGMATIC THEORY OF TRUTH	157
1. Pragmatism as a method and as a genetic theory of truth	157
2. Four different types of truth and of verification	162
A. The truth of knowledge by acquaintance	162
B. The truth of "knowledge about"	163
C. A priori truths	166
D. The truth-value of belief	167
3. Husserl's definition of truth as the ideal adequation between meaning-intention and meaning fulfillment	169
4. The retrogression from the self-evidence of judgment to the original founding evidences of the life-world	172
Conclusion — ACTION: THE FINAL SYNTHESIS	174
Bibliography	181