

Contents

Detailed Table of Contents	xiii
Note on In-Text Citations	xviii
1. Introduction	1
I Historical Introduction to Truth-Theoretic Semantics	19
2. Learnable Languages and the Compositionality Requirement	25
3. The Form of a Meaning Theory and Difficulties for Traditional Approaches	38
4. The Introduction of a Truth Theory as the Vehicle of a Meaning Theory	63
Appendix: A Closed Form Recursive Definition of 'true ₀ '	76
5. Truth and Context Sensitivity	78
Appendix: Formulating a Truth Theory for Natural Languages which Predicates Truth of Utterances of Sentences	88
6. Davidson's Extensionalist Proposal	92
7. The Extensionality and Determination Problems	101
8. Foster's Objection	113
9. Relation to an Explicit Meaning Theory and to Semantic Competence	119
10. The Problem of Semantic Defects in Natural Languages	125
Summary of Part I	143
II Radical Interpretation	147
11. Clarifying the Project	151
12. The Procedure of the Radical Interpreter	174
13. The Justification of the Principle of Charity	198

Contents

14. The Theory of Agency and Additional Constraints	209
15. Indeterminacy	221
16. Development of a Unified Theory of Meaning and Action	248
17. The Reality of Language	263
Summary of Part II	298
III Metaphysics and Epistemology	301
18. The Impossibility of Alternative Conceptual Schemes	305
19. Externalism and the Impossibility of Massive Error	322
20. First Person Authority	343
21. Inscrutability of Reference	373
22. Language, Thought, and World	387
Summary of Part III	420
Bibliography	425
Index	435