

THE CONTENTS

---

[The Life of Hugo Grotius] <sup>1</sup>	59
[Dedication] <sup>1</sup>	71
[The Preliminary Discourse] <sup>1</sup>	75

Book I

CHAPTER I

What War is, and what Right is.

Sect. I. The Order of the Treatise.	133
II. The Definition of War, and the Original of the Word (Bellum).	134
III. Right, as it is attributed to Action, described, and divided into that of Governors, and that of Equals.	136
IV. Right taken for Quality divided into Faculty, and Aptitude or Fitness.	138
V. Faculty strictly taken, divided into Power, Property, and Credit.	138
VI. Another Division of Faculty into private and eminent.	140
VII. What Aptitude is.	141
VIII. Of expletive and attributive Justice, that they are not properly distinguished by Geometrical and Arithmetical Proportions, nor is this conversant about Things common, nor that about Things private.	142
IX. Right, taken for a Rule or Law, defined and divided into natural and voluntary.	147

1. Omitted in original table of contents.

X. The Law of Nature defined, divided, and distinguished from such as are not properly called so.	150
XI. That Natural Instinct does not make another distinct Law.	157
XII. How the Law of Nature may be proved.	159
XIII. Voluntary Right divided into human and divine.	162
XIV. Human Right divided into a Civil Right, a less extensive Right than the Civil, and a more extensive Right, or the Law of Nations: This explained and proved.	162
XV. The Divine Law divided into that which is universal, and that which is peculiar to one Nation.	164
XVI. That the Law given to the Hebrews did not oblige Strangers.	166
XVII. What Arguments Christians may fetch from the Judaical Law, and how.	175

CHAPTER II

Whether it is ever lawful to make War.

Sect. I. That to make War is not contrary to the Law of Nature, proved by Reasons.	180
II. Proved by History.	185
III. Proved by a general Consent.	187
IV. That War is not contrary to the Law of Nations.	189
V. That the voluntary divine Law before Christ, was not against it, proved; and the Objections answered.	190
VI. Certain Cautions concerning the Question, whether War be contrary to the Law of the Gospel.	195
VII. Arguments for the negative Opinion, out of Holy Writ.	197
VIII. The Arguments out of Scripture for the Affirmative answered.	208
IX. The Opinion of the Primitive Christians concerning this examined.	222

CHAPTER III

The Division of War into publick and private; together with an Explication of the Supreme Power.

Sect. I. The Division of War into publick and private.	240
II. That every private War was not by the Law of Nature unlawful, after the erecting of Tribunals of Justice, defended with some Examples.	241
III. Nor by the Evangelical Law, with an Answer to the Objections.	242
IV. Publick War divided into that which is solemn, and that which is not solemn.	248
V. Whether a War made by the Authority of a Magistrate who has not the supreme Power, be a publick one, and when it is so.	252
VI. In what the civil Power consists.	257
VII. What Power is supreme.	259
VIII. The Opinion refuted, which holds that the supreme Power is always in the People, and the Arguments for it answered.	260
IX. Mutual Subjection of King and People refuted.	276
X. Some Cautions for judging of the sovereign Power: The First is, to distinguish a Likeness of Terms, when the Affair is altogether different.	277
XI. The Second Caution is, to distinguish a Right from the Manner of possessing that Right.	279
XII. Some sovereign Powers are held with a full Right of Alienation.	285
XIII. Others have no such Right.	293
XIV. Some Powers, tho' not supreme, are yet held with the Right of Alienation.	296
XV. This appears from the different Ways of assigning Regents and Guardians in Kingdoms.	297
XVI. A Sovereign does not lose his supreme Power by any Promise, provided what he promises does not regard the Law of GOD or Nature.	300
XVII. That the sovereign Power is sometimes divided into subjective and potential Parts.	305

XVIII. But that there is such a Division, or sharing of the Sovereignty between King and People, is ill inferred from this, that Princes will have some of their Acts confirmed by the Senate.	307
XIX. Several other Examples ill drawn into such a Conclusion.	308
XX. What are real Precedents in this Case.	309
XXI. A Confederate on unequal Terms, that is, a Prince or State, tho' obliged to acknowledge another Prince or State superior, may yet be invested with sovereign Power.	318
XXII. Even they who pay Tribute may however have this Power.	331
XXIII. And they who hold their Dominions by a feudal Tenure.	332
XXIV. A Man's Right distinguished from the Exercise of that Right.	335

CHAPTER IV

Of a War made by Subjects against their Sovereigns.

Sect. I. The Question stated.	336
II. War against Superiors, as such, is unlawful by the Law of Nature.	338
III. Nor allowed by the Hebrew Law.	342
IV. Nor by the Law of the Gospel; this proved by Scripture.	344
V. And by the Practice of the Primitive Christians.	349
VI. The Opinion which maintains that it is lawful for inferior Magistrates to engage in a War against the Sovereign, refuted by Reason and Scripture.	354
VII. What is to be done in Case of extreme and inevitable Necessity.	356
VIII. A free People may make War against their Prince.	372
IX. And against a King who has abdicated his Kingdom.	373
X. Or against a King who would alienate his Crown; but this only to prevent the Delivery of it.	373
XI. Or against a King who evidently declares himself his Subjects Enemy.	375
XII. And against a King who breaks the Condition upon which he was admitted.	376

XIII. And against a King who, having but one Part of the sovereign Power, invades the other.	376
XIV. Or if there is reserved to the People a Liberty of resisting in some certain Cases.	377
XV. How far an Usurper is to be obeyed.	377
XVI. An Usurper may be opposed and treated as an Enemy, by Vertue of the Right of War still continuing.	378
XVII. Or by Vertue of an antecedent Law.	379
XVIII. Or by his Commission who has a Right to the Crown.	380
XIX. Why an Usurper is not to be resisted but in these Cases.	381
XX. In a controverted Title to a Crown, private Persons ought not to take upon them to determine the Pretensions.	383

CHAPTER V

Who may lawfully make War.

Sect. I. The efficient Causes of War are those who engage in it, either upon their own Account, as Principals.	384
II. Or upon the Account of others, as Assistants.	384
III. Or are instrumental only, as Servants and Subjects.	386
IV. By the Law of Nature none prohibited to take up Arms.	386

Book II

CHAPTER I

Of the Causes of War; and first of the Defence of Persons and Goods.

Sect. I. What Causes of War may be termed justifiable.	389
II. Justifiable Causes of War are, when for Defence; the Recovery of one's Property, or one's Debt; or for the Punishment of an Offence committed.	393
III. War in Defence of Life lawful.	397
IV. But only against the Aggressor.	398

V. In a present and certain Danger, but not in such a one as is only Matter of Opinion.	398
VI. For the Preservation of a Limb or a Member.	401
VII. And especially in Defence of Chastity.	401
VIII. Self-Defence may sometimes be omitted.	402
IX. Self-Defence against a Person very useful to the Publick, a Crime from the Law of Charity.	403
X. That it is not lawful for Christians to murder a Man for a Box on the Ear, or such other slight Injury, or to avoid running away.	406
XI. Murder in Defence of our Goods, permitted by the Law of Nature.	408
XII. How far permitted by the Law of Moses.	408
XIII. Whether permitted at all, and how far, by the Gospel.	413
XIV. Whether the Civil Law permitting Murder in one's own Defence, gives a Right to the Fact, or only dispenses with the Punishment of it, explained by a Distinction.	415
XV. When a Duel or single Combat may be lawful.	415
XVI. Of Defence in a publick War.	416
XVII. War only to weaken a neighbouring Power, not lawful.	417
XVIII. Nor in him, who himself gave the just Occasion for a War.	417

CHAPTER II

Of Things which belong in common to all Men.

Sect. I. The Division of what is our own.	420
II. The Beginning and Improvement of Property.	420
III. Some Things can never become a Property, as the Sea, either taken in whole, or in Regard to its principal Parts, and the Reason why.	428
IV. Lands not inhabited are his who takes Possession of them, unless a whole Nation lay Claim to them by the same Right of Possession.	432
V. Wild Beasts, Fish, and Birds, are his who catches them, unless there be a Law to the contrary.	433

VI. In Case of Necessity Men have a Right of using that which others have a Property in, and from whence this Right arises.	433
VII. This holds good, unless where the Necessity is avoidable some other Way.	435
VIII. Or unless the Owner's Necessity is equal to ours.	436
IX. An Obligation to Restitution, where it can be made.	436
X. An Instance of this Right in War.	437
XI. Men have a Right to use those Things which are another's Property, if thereby there arises no Detriment to the Proprietor.	438
XII. From hence there is a Right to running Water.	438
XIII. The Right of passing Lands and Rivers, explained.	439
XIV. Whether a Duty may be laid on Goods that only pass by.	444
XV. A Right to stay for some Time.	446
XVI. Those who are driven out of their own Country have a Right to settle in any other, provided that they submit to the Rules and Government of the Place.	447
XVII. A Right to waste Places, how to be understood.	448
XVIII. A Right to such Actions as the Occasions of human Life require.	449
XIX. A Right to purchase Necessaries.	450
XX. But no Right always to sell their own Commodities.	450
XXI. A Right to Marriage explained.	450
XXII. A Right of doing what is permitted indifferently all Strangers to do.	451
XXIII. This Right is to be understood of those who are entitled to it by the Law of Nature, and not thro' Favour and Indulgence.	452
XXIV. Whether a Contract made with a People to oblige them to sell their Commodities to those only with whom they have bargained, and not to any others, be lawful.	452

CHAPTER III

Of the original Acquisition of Things; where also is treated of the Sea and Rivers.

Sect. I. Original Acquisition made by Division or Seizure.	454
II. Other Means of Acquisition rejected; such as the granting an incorporeal Right.	454
III. Or a Specification.	455
IV. Possession is double, Jurisdiction and Property; the Distinction explained.	455
V. The taking of Things moveable may be hindred by a Law.	458
VI. Upon what Right the Property of Infants and Madmen is founded.	459
VII. Rivers may be held in Property.	459
VIII. Whether the Sea may not be so too?	460
IX. 'Twas not allowed formerly in Countries depending on the Roman Empire.	460
X. But the Law of Nature is not against a Property in a Part of the Sea, which is, as it were, inclosed in the Land.	463
XI. Such a Property may be had, and how long it may endure.	465
XII. Such a Property can give no Right of obstructing an inoffensive Passage.	466
XIII. That there may be Jurisdiction over Part of the Sea, and how.	466
XIV. A Duty upon some certain Occasions may be imposed on those who go by Sea.	470
XV. Of Treaties which forbid some People to pass beyond certain prescribed Bounds.	471
XVI. Whether if the Course of a River be changed it alters the Territory, explained with a Distinction.	474
XVII. What Judgment must we make, if the Channel be quite altered?	478
XVIII. A River belongs sometimes wholly to one Territory.	479
XIX. Things that are quitted, are the Right of the next Possessor, unless the State has acquired a Right to a general Property.	479

CHAPTER IV

Of a Thing presumed to be quitted, and of the Right of Possession that follows; and how such Possession differs from Usucaption and Prescription.

- Sect. I. Why Usucaption or Prescription, properly so called, has nothing to do among different People, or their Sovereigns. 483
- II. But even among these, long Possession is frequently urged as a Right. 485
- III. The Reason of Possession inquired into from the Conjectures of a Man's Will and Intention, which Conjectures are derived not from Words only. 486
- IV. But also from an Overt-Act, or Deeds done. 487
- V. And from an Inaction or a Forbearance of Acting. 488
- VI. How Time joined with Non-Possession and with Silence, conduces to the Conjecture that the Right to the Thing is quitted. 491
- VII. That a Time exceeding the Memory of Man is commonly sufficient for such a Conjecture, and what such a Time is. 491
- VIII. An Answer to the Objection that no one is to be presumed willing to abandon or throw away what he has got. 492
- IX. It appears, that without any Conjecture at all, an immemorial Possession transfers and constitutes a Property. 496
- X. Whether Persons not yet born, may not, in this Manner, be deprived of their Rights. 497
- XI. That even the Right of Sovereign Power may be obtained either by a King or a People by long Possession. 499
- XII. Whether the Civil Laws of Usucaption and Prescription oblige him, who has the Sovereign Power; this explained with some Distinctions. 500
- XIII. Those Rights of Sovereignty that may be separated from it, or be communicated to others, are gained and lost by Usucaption or Prescription. 502
- XIV. The Opinion that Subjects may at any Time assert their Liberty, refuted. 503

XV. Those Rights which consist in a bare Power of doing such or such a Thing, are never lost by Time; this explained.	504
--	-----

CHAPTER V

Of the original Acquisition of a Right over Persons; where also is treated of the Right of Parents: Of Marriages: Of Societies: Of the Right over Subjects; and over Slaves.

Sect. I. The Right of Parents over Children.	508
II. A Distinction of Seasons in Children; where too of Children's Property in Things.	509
III. Of the Season past Childhood, but when the Person does still continue in the Family.	510
IV. Of the Right of chastising Children.	511
V. Of the Right of selling Children.	511
VI. Of the Season past Childhood, and when the Person is out of the Family.	512
VII. A Distinction of the natural and civil Power of Parents.	512
VIII. Of the Husband's Right over his Wife.	513
IX. Whether an Incapacity of parting with a Wife, or a Confinement to One, are essential to Marriage from the Law of Nature, or only from that of the Gospel.	514
X. By the Law of Nature only, Marriages are not void for Want of the Consent of Parents.	523
XI. By the evangelical Law, Marriages with another Woman's Husband, or another Man's Wife, are null and void.	526
XII. By the Law of Nature, the Marriages of Parents with their Children are unwarrantable and void.	526
XIII. The Marriages of Brothers with Sisters, of a Mother-in-Law with her Son-in-Law, of a Father-in-Law with his Daughter-in-Law, and such other Matches as these, are unwarrantable and void by the positive Law of GOD.	531

XIV. Marriages with Relations of a more distant Degree, do not seem so unwarrantable.	537
XV. There may be some very warrantable Matches; which yet may be termed by the Laws Concubinage.	542
XVI. Some Marriages not allowed to be contracted, may yet, when contracted, stand good.	544
XVII. The Right and Authority in all Sorts of Societies is in the Majority.	545
XVIII. What Opinion ought to prevail when the Number of Votes is equal.	547
XIX. What Opinions are to be divided, what to be joined.	548
XX. The Right of the Absent devolves on those who are present.	550
XXI. What Rank is to be observed amongst Equals, even if they be crowned Heads.	550
XXII. In Societies founded on a certain Thing the Votes are to be considered with Regard to every one's Share in that Thing.	551
XXIII. The Power of a State over its Subjects.	552
XXIV. Whether Subjects may leave the State they belong to; explained by a Distinction.	553
XXV. A State has no Power over those it has banished.	555
XXVI. What Power is granted a Man over his adopted Child, from his voluntary Subjection to him.	555
XXVII. What Right a Person has over his Slaves.	556
XXVIII. How far the Power of Life and Death may be said to be comprehended in this Right.	558
XXIX. What the Law of Nature directs about Children born of Slaves.	559
XXX. Several Sorts of Servitude.	561
XXXI. What Power there is over a People who voluntarily become Subjects.	563
XXXII. What Power over a Person who has forfeited his Liberty by some Crime.	564

CHAPTER VI

Of an Acquisition (Possession or Purchase) derived from a Man's own Deed; where also of the Alienation of a Government, and of the Things and Revenues that belong to that Government.

Sect. I. What is required in the Giver to make the Alienation valid.	566
II. What in the Receiver.	567
III. Crowns may be alienated sometimes by the King; sometimes by the People.	568
IV. The Government over one Part of the People cannot be alienated by the other, if that Part do not give their Consent.	568
V. Nor can such a Part transfer the Government over its own self, unless in Case of extreme Necessity.	569
VI. The Reason of this Difference.	570
VII. The Jurisdiction over a Place may be transferred.	572
VIII. The Opinion that a Prince may for Advantage, or out of Necessity make over some Parts of his Kingdom, refuted.	573
IX. Infeoffment and mortgaging are a Sort of Alienation.	573
X. The People's Consent and Approbation, either particularly expressed, or founded on Custom, is required to the transferring even of Jurisdictions and Employments in the State, that are not sovereign.	574
XI. Princes cannot alienate the People's Demain.	575
XII. The Revenue of the Demain, or Patrimony, must be distinguished from the Demain or Patrimony itself.	576
XIII. How far, and why some Parts of the People's Patrimony may be mortgaged by the Prince.	577
XIV. That a Will or Testament is a Kind of Alienation, and of natural Right.	577

CHAPTER VII

*Of an Acquisition derived to one by Vertue of some Law;
where also of succeeding to the Effects and Estate of a Man who dies without a Will.*

Sect. I. Some Civil Laws are unjust, and therefore do not transfer a Property; such are those that Confiscate the Goods of shipwrecked People.	579
II. By the Law of Nature a Man gains a just Right to that which he has taken from another, in Satisfaction for his own Debt; and when this holds good.	581
III. How the Succession to the Estate of him who dies without a Will does originally and naturally arise.	583
IV. Whether any of the Parents Effects are by the Right of Nature their Children's Due: This explained by a Distinction.	584
V. In a Succession Children are preferred to the Father and Mother of the Deceased, and why.	588
VI. The Original of that Succession called a Representation, where one Person comes in the Room of another who was deceased before.	589
VII. Of Abdication and Disherison.	591
VIII. Of the Right of natural or illegitimate Children.	591
IX. Upon Failure of Issue, and where there is no Will, nor an express Law, the antient Estate and Effects must return to them from whom they at first came, or to their Posterity.	594
X. What has been newly purchased goes to the next Relations.	598
XI. A Variety of Laws about Succession.	600
XII. What Kind of Succession there is in patrimonial Crowns.	601
XIII. If such Kingdoms are not to be divided, the eldest is to be preferred.	603
XIV. In Case of any Dispute, the Kingdom, that is no otherwise Hereditary than by the People's Consent, must not be divided.	604
XV. Such Crowns continue hereditary no longer than there are Descendants of the first Prince living.	606
XVI. Natural Children have no Right to these Crowns.	606

XVII. In such Kingdoms Males are preferred before Females in the same Degree of Blood.	607
XVIII. Among Males the eldest is to be preferred.	607
XIX. Whether such a Crown be Part of the Inheritance.	610
XX. It is to be presumed that the Succession to the Crown is such as was usual in Successions to other Effects, at the Time when that Kingdom first began; whether the Crown was Freehold.	613
XXI. Or held in Fee.	613
XXII. What a lineal Succession is, and how the Right is in that Case transmitted.	614
XXIII. What the lineal Agnatic Succession is.	616
XXIV. A Succession that always regards the nearest in Blood to the first King.	616
XXV. Whether the Son may be so disinherited, as not to succeed in his Father's Kingdom.	618
XXVI. Whether a Prince may for himself and his Children, abdicate and renounce all Title to the Crown.	621
XXVII. Neither Prince nor People have a Right to pass an absolute and peremptory Judgment on the Succession to the Crown.	622
XXVIII. The Son born before his Father's coming to the Crown, to be preferred before one born after.	625
XXIX. Unless it appears that the Crown was conferred on some other Condition.	627
XXX. Whether the Grandchild by the elder Son is to be preferred before a younger Son; this explained by a Distinction.	628
XXXI. So likewise whether the King's surviving younger Brother is to be preferred before his elder Brother's Son.	631
XXXII. Whether the King's Brother's Son is to be preferred before the King's Uncle.	632
XXXIII. Whether the Grandson by the Son is to be preferred before the elder by the Daughter.	632
XXXIV. Whether the younger Grandson by the Son is to be preferred before the elder by the Daughter.	632

XXXV. Whether the Grand-daughter by the elder Son is to be preferred before the younger Son.	632
XXXVI. Whether the Sister's Son is to be preferred before the Brother's Daughter.	633
XXXVII. Whether the elder Brother's Daughter is to be preferred before the younger Brother.	633

CHAPTER VIII

Of such Properties as are commonly called Acquisitions by the Right of Nations.

Sect. I. Many Things are said to be by the Right of Nations, which, properly speaking, are not so.	634
II. Fish in Ponds, and Beasts in Parks, are by the Law of Nature one's own peculiar Property, notwithstanding whatever the Roman Laws have declared to the contrary.	636
III. Wild Beasts that get away, cease not to be the first Owners, if they can know them again.	636
IV. Whether Possession may be gained by Instruments, and how.	638
V. It is not against the Law of Nations that all wild Beasts should belong to the Crown.	638
VI. How the Possession of other Things that have no Owner may be gained.	639
VII. To whom Money found does naturally belong; and the Variety of Laws about it.	640
VIII. That what is delivered us by the Roman Laws concerning Islands and Alluvions, is neither natural nor from the Right of Nations.	641
IX. That an Island in a River, and a dried up Channel, are naturally his to whom the River, or that Part of the River, belongs; that is, they are the Publick's.	643
X. That a Flood does not, according to Nature, take away a Property in Land.	646
XI. Improvements made by Floods, if in Dispute, belong to the Publick.	648

XII. But they seem to be granted to those whose Lands have no other Bounds but the River.	649
XIII. The same may be said of the Shore that the River leaves, or of any Part of the Channel that is dried up.	650
XIV. What is to be reckoned a Flood-Addition only, and what an Island.	651
XV. When the Alluvions belong to Vassals.	651
XVI. The Arguments with which the Roman Lawyers would prove their Rights to be, as it were, the Rights of Nature, answered.	652
XVII. An Highway naturally hinders any Advantage of Alluvions.	653
XVIII. That it is not natural that the Young should follow the Dam only.	653
XIX. That a Thing according to Nature becomes common, as well by its Specification or Form, where the Matter is another's, as by Confusion or Mixture.	654
XX. Nay, tho' by Unskilfulness or Design the Matter be spoiled.	656
XXI. That it is not natural that a Thing of lesser Value should, on the Account of the other's greater Worth, go along with it; where also other Mistakes of the Roman Lawyers are taken Notice of.	657
XXII. By Planting, Sowing, or Building upon another Man's Ground, two Parties are naturally admitted Sharers.	659
XXIII. He, who has another Man's Things in Possession cannot claim the Profits of them, but may charge him with all the Expences that he is at about them.	659
XXIV. And this he may do, tho' he got them unjustly.	660
XXV. That an actual Delivery is not required by Nature in the transferring of a Property.	660
XXVI. The Design and Use of what has been hitherto said.	663

CHAPTER IX

When Jurisdiction and Property cease.

Sect. I. That Property and Jurisdiction cease when he, who had the Right, dies and leaves no Successors.	664
---	-----

II. So does the Right of a Family cease, if the Family be extinct.	665
III. So does that of a People too, if they cease to be a People.	665
IV. Which happens when its essential Parts are gone.	669
V. When the whole Body of the People is subverted.	670
VI. When that Form is lost which makes them a People.	670
VII. But not by only changing of Place.	671
VIII. Nor upon the Change of Government; where also of the Rank that is due to a new King, or a People that is lately become free.	671
IX. What if two Nations be united.	673
X. What if the same People be divided.	673
XI. To whom now do those Things and Dominions belong, which were once under the Roman Jurisdiction, where it does not appear that they have been alienated?	674
XII. Of the Right of Heirs.	684
XIII. Of the Right of a Conqueror.	684

CHAPTER X

Of the Obligation that arises from Property.

Sect. I. The Obligation to return what is another's to the Owner, from whence, and what Manner of Obligation it is. We are obliged to restore the Things we have by us, and to do what we can that the Owner may have them again.	685
II. Where we have not the Things by us, or they are not in Being, we are obliged to restore what we have gained from them; this illustrated by several Examples.	689
III. He who has honestly got what is another's, is not obliged to restore it, if it perish, or be lost.	692
IV. But he is obliged to restore the Fruits or Produce of it that remain, or are in Being.	693
V. Even those that are spent and wasted, unless it appears that had he not had them by him, he would have had no Occasion to have spent such Things.	693
VI. But not those which he neglected to take the Advantage of.	693

VII. That such a one is not obliged to make Restitution for what he has given away; this with a Distinction.	694
VIII. Nor if he only sells what he bought; this with a Distinction too.	694
IX. When he, who has fairly bought what is another's, may claim all, or part of what it cost him.	694
X. If I buy what does not belong to him who sells it, I must not return it to him, but to the Owner.	697
XI. If I have got a Thing in my Hands, and do not know the Owner, I am not obliged to part with it to any body.	697
XII. If I take a Fee upon a dishonest Account, or for doing a Service that I am obliged to, I am not, by the Law of Nature, bound to restore it.	697
XIII. The Opinion, that the Property of Things which consist of Weight, Number, or Measure, may pass without the Consent of the Owner, refuted.	698

CHAPTER XI

Of Promises.

Sect. I. The Opinion which maintains that no Promises are naturally obliging, refuted.	699
II. A bare Assertion does not lay one under an Obligation.	703
III. That an imperfect Promise does naturally oblige, but no Right arises from thence to the Person who receives it.	703
IV. What that Promise is, from whence a Right to another does arise.	704
V. First, to make a Promise compleat, it is required that the Promiser has the Use of his Reason; where the Law of Nature is distinguished from the Civil Law in the Case of Minors.	709
VI. Whether a Promise given through Mistake does naturally oblige us, and how far it does so.	710
VII. A Promise made through Fear obliges; but he who caused that Fear is bound to disengage or indemnify the Person promising.	712
VIII. To make the Promise valid, it must be in the Power of the Promiser to perform it.	714

IX. Whether a Promise made on an ill Account be valid; this explained by a Distinction.	715
X. What we are to judge of a Promise that entitles us to something due before.	717
XI. The Manner of making a firm Promise in our own Persons.	717
XII. The Manner of confirming a Promise made by others, and of Embassadors who go beyond their Commissions.	717
XIII. How far the Master of a Ship, and Factors, are obliged by the Law of Nature, where also is observed the Error of the Roman Laws.	718
XIV. A Promise must be accepted before it can be binding.	719
XV. Whether this Acceptance should be signified to the Persons promising, explained by a Distinction.	720
XVI. Whether a Promise may be revoked, the Person to whom it was given dying before he had accepted of it.	722
XVII. Whether it may be revoked upon the Death of the Person employed to signify it, explained by some Distinctions.	723
XVIII. Whether a Promise accepted by Proxy may be reversed, explained by some Distinctions.	725
XIX. Within what Time some Conditions may be tacked to a Promise.	727
XX. How an invalid Promise may become obliging.	727
XXI. Promises made without any Motive are not therefore naturally void.	728
XXII. How far he who promises for what another is to do, stands himself naturally obliged.	728

CHAPTER XII

Of Contracts.

Sect. I. Such human Acts as are advantageous to others, are divided, first, into simple and mixed.	729
II. Simple Acts are divided into such as are merely gratuitous, or that imply a mutual Obligation.	729

III. And into such as are permutatory, or by Way of exchange; and these are either such as adjust what each has to give or to do.	730
IV. Or such as put Things upon a common Foot.	735
V. Acts mixt, are either so essentially, and of themselves,	735
VI. Or by Reason of some Accessory.	736
VII. Which of these Acts are called Contracts.	736
VIII. There is an Equality required in Contracts, and first, in the Acts that are previous to them.	736
IX. One is to know every Thing that relates to what he is dealing about.	737
X. One is to be left entirely to one's Freedom, and to have no Force put upon his Will.	739
XI. There is, secondly, an Equality required in the Bargain itself, if it be permutatory or by Way of Exchange.	740
XII. And, thirdly, in the Thing we are bargaining for; this explained.	741
XIII. What Equality is to be observed in Acts of Beneficence in such as are altogether so, and in such as are only so in part.	742
XIV. How Things are to be valued in selling; and for what Reasons the Price may be raised or lowered.	743
XV. When a Sale is compleat by the Law of Nature, and when the Property of the Thing is transferred.	745
XVI. What Monopolies are against the Rights of Nature, or the Rules of Charity.	749
XVII. How Money goes for every Thing else.	750
XVIII. By the Law of Nature nothing is to be abated of the Rent or Hire on Account of Barrenness, or the like Accidents; and what if the first Tenant being not able to use it, it be lett to another?	751
XIX. How a just Salary may be encreased or lessened.	752
XX. By what Law the taking of Interest is forbidden.	753
XXI. What Advantages do not come under the Name of Interest.	759
XXII. What Power the Civil Laws have in this Affair.	760
XXIII. What Rules one must go by in a Contract for saving harmless, or of Insurance.	760

XXIV. How one is to be regulated in a Company or Partnership; where also several Kinds of it are explained.	761
XXV. Of a Sea-Company.	762
XXVI. By the Law of Nations an Inequality in the Terms, if agreed upon, is not minded as to external Acts; and in what Sense this is said to be natural.	763

CHAPTER XIII

Of an Oath.

Sect. I. How great the Authority of an Oath is, even in the Opinion of the Heathens.	768
II. That a deliberate Mind or Intention is required in such an Affair, I mean, that he who swears is willing to do so.	770
III. The Words of an Oath oblige in that Sense, in which he to whom we swear, is believed to understand them.	771
IV. An Oath procured by Fraud, when binding.	775
V. The Words of an Oath not to be extended beyond their usual Sense and Acceptation.	777
VI. The Oath that engages any Thing unlawful does not oblige.	778
VII. Or if it hinders any greater moral Good.	780
VIII. Or if the Thing engaged for be impossible.	781
IX. What if that Impossibility be only for a Time.	781
X. Men swear by the Name of GOD, and in what Sense they do it.	781
XI. And by the Name of other Things too, with a Regard to GOD.	782
XII. It is an Oath tho' sworn by false Gods.	785
XIII. The Effects of an Oath; whence arises a twofold Obligation; one at the Time of Swearing, the other after; this distinctly explained.	786
XIV. When an Oath lays us under an Obligation both to GOD and Man, and when to GOD only.	786
XV. The Opinion, that an Oath given to a Pirate or Tyrant binds not before GOD, confuted.	788

XVI. Whether an Oath given to one who does not regard his own Word be to be kept; explained by a Distinction.	790
XVII. He who is bound to GOD alone does not oblige his Heir after him.	791
XVIII. It is no Perjury not to keep one's Word or Oath to him, who does not desire that it should be kept; or if that Quality or Circumstance of Condition, under which, and in Consideration of which, the Oath was made, ceases.	791
XIX. When that which is done contrary to one's Oath becomes void.	792
XX. How far the Prince's Power extends concerning what his Subjects have sworn to Strangers, or Strangers to them, explained by a Distinction.	792
XXI. What Manner of Oaths CHRIST forbids, when he prohibits Swearing at all.	795
XXII. What Circumstances have by Custom, without Swearing, the Force and Obligation of an Oath.	800

CHAPTER XIV

Of the Promises, Contracts, and Oaths of those who have the Sovereign Power.

Sect. I. The Opinion of those refuted, who hold that Restitutions to the full, which arise from the Civil Law, extends to the Acts of Kings, as such; as also, that Kings are not obliged by their own Oaths.	802
II. To what Acts of Kings the Laws extend, explained by several Distinctions.	804
III. When a King is obliged by his Oath, and when not.	806
IV. How far a King is obliged to what he has promised without any Cause or Reason.	806
V. The Use of what has been said of the Force of the Laws about the Contracts of Kings.	806
VI. In what Sense a King may be said to be obliged to his Subjects by the Law of Nature only, or by the Civil Law too.	806
VII. How a Right gained by Subjects may lawfully be taken away.	810

VIII. The Distinction of Things gained by the Law of Nature, and by the Civil Law, rejected.	810
IX. Whether the Contracts of Kings are Laws, and when they are so.	810
X. How by the Contracts of Kings they who inherit all their Goods stand obliged.	811
XI. How by those Contracts they who succeed in the Kingdom may be obliged.	811
XII. And how far.	812
XIII. Which of the free Grants of Kings are revocable, and which not.	816
XIV. Whether he, whose the Crown really is, be bound by the Contracts of them who invade or usurp the Kingdom.	816

CHAPTER XV

Of Publick Treaties as well those that are made by the Sovereign himself, as those that are concluded without his Order.

Sect. I. What publick Conventions are.	817
II. They are divided into Leagues, publick Engagements, or Sponsions, and other Agreements.	817
III. The Difference between Leagues and Engagements, or Sponsions, and how far publick Engagements oblige.	818
IV. Menippus's Division of Leagues rejected.	820
V. Leagues divided into those that injoin the same that the Law of Nature does; and from whence this arises.	821
VI. And into those that add something to it; and these are either upon equal Terms.	823
VII. Or upon unequal, which are again divided.	826
VIII. Alliances made with those who do not profess the true Religion, are allowed by the Law of Nature.	827
IX. Nor universally forbidden by the Hebrew Law.	828
X. Nor by the Christian Law.	833
XI. Cautions about such Leagues.	835

XII. All Christians obliged to enter into League against the Enemies of Christianity.	837
XIII. If several of our Allies are at War, which of them we ought to assist, explained by Distinctions.	837
XIV. Whether a League may be renewed tacitly.	841
XV. Whether a Violation on one side frees the other from being obliged.	841
XVI. How far the Sponsors are obliged, if what they undertake for be disallowed; where also of the Caudine Engagement.	842
XVII. Whether a Sponson, or Engagement, not disapproved of, does by its being known and passed over in Silence lay an Obligation; this explained with some Distinctions, where also of Lutatius's Treaty.	846

CHAPTER XVI

Of Interpretation, or the Way of explaining the Sense of a Promise or Convention.

Sect. I. How Promises do outwardly oblige.	848
II. Words to be understood, as commonly taken, unless there are good Conjectures to the contrary.	849
III. Terms of Art are to be explained according to the respective Art they belong to.	850
IV. We use Conjectures, where Words are ambiguous or seem contradictory, or because such Conjectures do naturally offer themselves to us.	851
V. From the subject Matter.	852
VI. From the Effect.	853
VII. From the Circumstances and Connection.	854
VIII. To this belongs that Conjecture which is drawn from the Motive, and when and how this Conjecture is of Service.	854
IX. The Distinction of Significations into such as are loose and extensive, and such as are strict and precise.	855
X. The Distinction of Promises into favourable, odious, and mixt or middle ones.	856

- XI. The Difference between Contracts due in Equity, and such as are due in Strictness of Law, rejected, as to the Acts of States and Princes. 858
- XII. Out of these Distinctions some Rules are formed, that may direct us in our Interpretations of the Meaning of Words and Promises. 858
- XIII. Whether under the Name of Allies, future ones are comprehended, and how far they are so; where also of the Romans Treaty with Asdrubal, and such Controversies as these. 860
- XIV. How is it to be understood, that one Party shall not make War without the other's Leave? 863
- XV. About the Words, that Carthage shall be free. 864
- XVI. What Treaties are to be esteemed real, and what personal; this explained by Distinctions. 865
- XVII. A League with a King remains good, tho' he be expelled his Kingdom. 868
- XVIII. But it does not reach to the Usurper of the Crown. 868
- XIX. To whom the Promise is due, when made to him who shall first do such or such a Thing, if it be done by many at once. 869
- XX. A Conjecture freely offering itself, may either enlarge the Sense, and when it does so. 871
- XXI. Where also of executing an Order in some other Manner than what was prescribed. 874
- XXII. Or it restrains the Sense, and that either from some original Defect in the Will, which is discovered by the Absurdity of it. 875
- XXIII. Or from the ceasing of the Motive. 875
- XXIV. Or from a Defect in the Matter. 875
- XXV. An Observation on the Conjectures last mentioned. 876
- XXVI. Or when some Accident happens inconsistent with the Speaker's Design, as when the Thing is unlawful. 876
- XXVII. Or too burthensome, all Circumstances considered. 877
- XXVIII. And from other Signs; as when the Parts of an Act clash and interfere. 879
- XXIX. What Rules are in such a Case to be observed. 880

XXX. That upon a Scruple a Writing is not essential to the Validity of a Contract.	882
XXXI. That the Contracts of Kings are not to be interpreted by the Roman Law.	883
XXXII. Whose Words are most to be observed, whether his who offers a Condition, or his who accepts it; this explained by Distinction.	883

CHAPTER XVII

Of the Damage done by an Injury, and of the Obligation thence arising.

Sect. I. That an Injury obliges us to repair the Damage.	884
II. Damage is that which is contrary to a Man's Right strictly so called.	884
III. A Fitness for a Thing is carefully to be distinguished from a Right strictly so called.	886
IV. That Damage is to be extended even to the Fruits or Increase of any Thing.	887
V. And also to the ceasing of that Increase.	887
VI. Damage occasioned by doing what we ought not; primarily.	887
VII. And secondarily.	888
VIII. Also by not doing what we ought; primarily.	888
IX. And secondarily.	888
X. What those must contribute towards the Act, who are bound to repair the Damage.	889
XI. In what Order they are bound.	889
XII. This Obligation to be extended even to the consequent Damage.	890
XIII. An Instance in a Manslayer.	890
XIV. In one who maims another.	891
XV. In an Adulterer and Fornicator.	891
XVI. In a Thief, a Robber, and others.	892
XVII. In one who procures a Promise by Fraud or unjust Fear.	892

XVIII. What, if by Fear that is accounted just by the Law of Nature?	892
XIX. What, if by Fear accounted just by the Law of Nations?	893
XX. How far the Civil Powers are bound for Damages done by their Subjects; where the Question is handled concerning Prizes taken at Sea, from Allies, contrary to publick Command.	894
XXI. That by the Law of Nature no Man is bound to repair Damages done by his Beast or Vessel without his Fault.	895
XXII. That we may do a Man Damage in his Reputation and Honour; and how this is to be repaired.	897

CHAPTER XVIII

Of the Right of Embassy.

Sect. I. That certain Obligations arise from the Law of Nations, such as the Rights of Embassy.	898
II. Among whom this takes Place.	900
III. Whether an Embassy be always to be admitted.	903
IV. That Defence is lawful against Embassadors, by Way of preventing Mischief, but not by Way of punishing.	906
V. That he, to whom the Ambassador is not sent, is not bound to observe the Rights of Embassy.	916
VI. That even an Enemy to whom the Ambassador is sent, is bound.	918
VII. Embassadors not subject to the Law of Retaliation.	919
VIII. That the Rights of Embassy are to be extended even to the Attendants of Embassadors, if the Embassadors please.	920
IX. And to their moveable Goods.	922
X. Instances of an Obligation, without the Right of Compulsion.	922
XI. How great this Right of Embassy is.	924

CHAPTER XIX

Of the Right of Burial.

Sect. I. From the same Law of Nations arises the Right of Burying the Dead.	925
II. From whence this Custom comes.	931
III. 'Tis due even to Enemies.	938
IV. Whether even to notorious Malefactors.	941
V. Whether also to those who kill themselves.	943
VI. What other Rights belong to us by the Law of Nations.	948

CHAPTER XX

Of Punishments.

Sect. I. The Definition and Original of Punishment.	949
II. That Punishment belongs to expletive Justice, and how.	951
III. That to punish does not naturally belong to any one Person, but that Punishment may be lawfully required according to the Law of Nature, by any Body who is not guilty of the like Crime.	955
IV. That among Men Punishment is not to be required but for the Sake of some Benefit that may accrue thereby; but that it is otherwise with GOD; and why?	956
V. In what Sense Revenge is naturally unlawful.	959
VI. The Benefit of Punishment threefold.	961
VII. Punishment is for the Benefit of the Offender; and that any one has by the Law of Nature a Right to inflict it; but this with a Distinction.	963
VIII. For the Benefit also of the Person offended; where of Revenge allowable by the Law of Nations.	966
IX. And for the Benefit of all Persons.	972
X. What the Gospel has enjoined in this Case.	977
XI. The Argument drawn from the Mercy of GOD declared in the Gospel, answered.	984

XII. And that from the cutting off of the Opportunity of Repentance.	985
XIII. Imperfect Divisions of Punishment rejected.	987
XIV. That it is not safe for private Christians to punish, even when the Law of Nations permits them.	989
XV. Or to be forward in a Prosecution.	989
XVI. Or to affect the Office of a Judge in capital Crimes.	989
XVII. Whether human Laws, which permit one Man to kill another, grant him a Right so to do, or only Impunity for doing it; explained by a Distinction.	990
XVIII. That internal Acts are not punishable by Men.	991
XIX. Nor external Acts, that are unavoidable by human Nature.	992
XX. Nor those Acts that are neither directly nor indirectly hurtful to human Society; the Reason of which is assigned.	994
XXI. The Opinion of those who hold that it is never lawful to pardon, rejected.	995
XXII. 'Tis shewn here that Punishment is allowable before the Establishment of any penal Laws.	996
XXIII. But not always.	998
XXIV. And also after the penal Law is made.	998
XXV. What reasonable intrinsic Causes justify the doing of it.	1000
XXVI. What extrinsick ones.	1000
XXVII. The Opinion that there is no just Reason for dispensing with a Penalty, but what is included in the Law, by Way of tacit Exception, rejected.	1002
XXVIII. The Punishment is to be proportioned to the Crime.	1002
XXIX. Regard is to be had here to the Motives which we are to compare with one another.	1003
XXX. And to the Causes too which ought to restrain us; where of the Degrees of the Precepts in the Decalogue, with Respect to our Neighbour; and some other Things.	1005
XXXI. To the Capacity also of the Offender, either for one or t'other, which Capacity is variously considered.	1009

XXXII. That the Punishment may exceed the Proportion of the Damage done, and why.	1010
XXXIII. The Opinion of harmonical Proportions in Punishments, rejected.	1012
XXXIV. That a Punishment is to be alleviated out of Charity, unless a greater Charity opposes it.	1013
XXXV. How the Easiness of offending inclines to Punishment, and how the Custom of offending either excites us to punish, or dissuades us from punishing.	1013
XXXVI. The Use of Clemency in mitigating Punishments.	1015
XXXVII. What the Hebrews and the Romans had Regard to in Punishments may be referred to the Places above-mentioned.	1017
XXXVIII. Of War made for the exacting of Punishments.	1018
XXXIX. Whether a War on the Account of Offences just begun is lawful, explained by a Distinction.	1018
XL. Whether it be lawful for Kings and States to make War upon such as violate the Law of Nature, tho' they have committed nothing against them or their Subjects; this explained, and the Opinion that would have Jurisdiction naturally necessary towards punishing, rejected.	1020
XLI. The Law of Nature is to be distinguished from civil Customs generally received.	1025
XLII. And from the voluntary divine Law, not known to all Nations.	1026
XLIII. What is manifest in the Law of Nature is to be distinguished from that which is not so.	1026
XLIV. Whether War may be made for Offences against GOD only.	1027
XLV. Which are the most common Notions of a GOD, and how they are contained in the first Precepts of the Decalogue.	1032
XLVI. That those who first violate these Notions are punishable.	1035
XLVII. But not others; which is shewn by an Argument drawn from the Mosaick Law.	1038
XLVIII. That War cannot be justly made upon those who refuse to embrace the Christian Religion.	1041

XLIX. War may justly be made against those who persecute Christians only for their being so.	1044
L. But not against those who are mistaken in the Interpretation of the divine Law; this illustrated by Authorities and Examples.	1045
LI. Tho' justly against those who are impious towards such as they believe to be Gods.	1051

CHAPTER XXI

Of the Communication of Punishments.

Sect. I. How the Partakers of the Crime must partake of the Punishment.	1053
II. The State, or the superior Powers are accountable for the Crimes of their Subjects, if they know of them, and do not prevent them when they can and ought to do so.	1055
III. And so are they, if they allow a Retreat and Admittance to such as have done an ill Thing somewhere else.	1061
IV. Unless they punish or deliver them up.	1062
V. The Privilege of Suppliants or Refugees belong not to Offenders, but to the unfortunate; with an Exception.	1067
VI. But all Sorts of Refugees are to be protected, till their Cause be decided; and by what Law such a Decision is to be had.	1075
VII. How Subjects participate of their Sovereign's Crime, or the Members of a Community of the Crimes of that Community; and how the Punishment of a whole State differs from that of particular Persons.	1076
VIII. How long after the Commission of a Fault, may a Community be punished for it.	1078
IX. Whether one free from the Fault may be liable to the Punishment.	1081
X. A Distinction between what is directly intended, and what happens consequentially.	1081
XI. The Difference between a Crime's being the Occasion of Punishment, and its being the real Cause of it.	1082
XII. No Man properly speaking can be justly punished for another's Fault, and the Reason why.	1084

XIII. Nor Children for the Faults of their Parents.	1085
XIV. The Objection from GOD's Proceedings in Relation to the Children of Offenders, answered.	1087
XV. Much less should other Relations be punished.	1091
XVI. But yet may Children and Relations of Offenders be denied what they would otherwise have enjoyed.	1091
XVII. Nor are the Subjects properly punishable for the Prince's Crimes.	1092
XVIII. Nor particular Persons for the Faults of the Whole, if they refused their Consent.	1093
XIX. The Heir not liable to Punishment, as such, and why.	1093
XX. But he is liable, if the Punishment pass into an Obligation of another Nature.	1094

CHAPTER XXII

Of the unjust Causes of War.

Sect. I. The Difference between the real and pretended Causes of War shewed.	1096
II. To engage in a War without either of these Causes is brutish.	1099
III. A War without just Reason is no better than Robbery.	1099
IV. There are some Reasons which upon first Appearance seem justifiable, but will not bear the Test of Examination.	1102
V. Such as an uncertain Fear.	1102
VI. An Advantage without a Necessity.	1103
VII. The Refusal of Marriages when there is Plenty of Women.	1104
VIII. The Desire of a better Land.	1104
IX. The Discovery of Things that belong to others.	1104
X. But what if the first Possessors are Fools?	1105
XI. The Desire of Liberty in a People who are subject, is also an unjust Reason.	1105
XII. And the Desire of ruling others against their Wills, under Pretence of its being their Interest to be governed by them.	1106

XIII. The Roman Emperor has no Claim to universal Monarchy, tho' some give him such a Title.	II06
XIV. Nor the Church, as others alledge.	II08
XV. Nor a Desire of accomplishing Prophecies without a Commission from GOD.	III1
XVI. Nor a Debt not due in Strictness of Justice, but by some other Way.	III2
XVII. The Distinction between a War whose Cause is unjust, and that which is faulty in some other Respects; and the different Effects of both.	III3

CHAPTER XXIII

Of the dubious Causes of War.

Sect. I. From whence Causes of Doubt in moral Matters proceed.	III5
II. We are to do nothing against our Conscience, tho' it be erroneous.	III6
III. That our Resolutions are determined by Reasons drawn from the Thing itself.	III7
IV. Or by the Authority of others.	III8
V. If a Scruple arise in a Matter of Importance on both Sides of the Question, and we are obliged to determine one Way or other, we must chuse the safest Resolution.	III9
VI. Whence it follows, that we are not in such a Case to declare for War.	III20
VII. For this may be avoided by a Conference.	III21
VIII. Or by Arbitration; where of the Duty of Christian Kings, in Respect of the Parties at War.	III23
IX. Or by casting of Lots.	III27
X. Whether Duelling may be allowed for preventing War.	III27
XI. That the Person in Possession has the better of it, where the Case is equally doubtful.	III29
XII. If neither be in Possession, where the Case is equally dubious, the Thing depending may be divided.	III29

XIII. Whether a War may be just on both Sides, explained by several Distinctions.	1130
--	------

CHAPTER XXIV

Exhortations not rashly to engage in a War, tho' for just Reasons.

Sect. I. We are often to abate of our Right for avoiding a War.	1133
II. Especially when that Right consists in inflicting Punishments.	1134
III. And particularly must an injured Prince do so.	1137
IV. A Prince is often to decline going to War, both for his own and his Subjects Safety.	1139
V. Rules of Prudence, directing our Choice of what is good.	1140
VI. An Example directing us in our Consultations about Liberty and Peace, when it is to save a State from utter Ruin and Destruction.	1142
VII. That he ought to forbear pursuing a Punishment by Force of Arms who is not very much superior in Power.	1145
VIII. War not to be engaged in, but out of Necessity.	1146
IX. Or when there is an important Reason, joined with a very favourable Opportunity.	1147
X. The Miseries of War displayed.	1148

CHAPTER XXV

Of the Causes for which War is to be undertaken on the Account of others.

Sect. I. War may be justly undertaken by a Prince for the Interest of his Subjects.	1151
II. But it is not always to be so undertaken.	1152
III. Whether an innocent Subject may be delivered up to an Enemy, for preventing some manifest Danger.	1152
IV. That we may lawfully undertake a War in Behalf of our Allies, whether the Alliance be equal or unequal.	1155

V. And also for our Friends.	1156
VI. And indeed for any Body whatever.	1157
VII. Yet it may be let alone without any Crime, if one is afraid for himself, or that he must kill the Aggressor.	1158
VIII. Whether that War is just which is made for the Defence of another's Subjects, explained by a Distinction.	1159
IX. That it is very unjust for People to enter into Confederacies, or to list themselves Soldiers for Money, without any Regard to the Reasons of the War.	1162
X. To bear Arms for Pay only, or for the meer Sake of Booty, is a Crime.	1166

CHAPTER XXVI

Of the Reasons that justify those who, under another's Command, engage in War.

Sect. I. Who are they, who may be said to be under another's Jurisdiction.	1167
II. What they must do in Case they are allowed to deliberate, or have a free Choice.	1167
III. They must not take up Arms, tho' commanded, if they are persuaded that the Cause is bad.	1167
IV. What they must do, if they are not satisfied whether the Cause be good or bad.	1173
V. That it is an Act of Clemency and Goodness in such a Case, for a Prince, to dispense with the Service of his scrupulous Subjects, and in the Lieu of it, to impose upon them some extraordinary Taxes.	1180
VI. When Subjects may lawfully take up Arms in an unjust War.	1182

Book III

CHAPTER I

Certain general Rules, shewing what by the Law of Nature is allowable in War; where also the Author treats of Deceit and Lying.

Sect. I. The Subject and Design of this Book.	1185
II. In War all Things necessary to the End are lawful.	1186
III. What is lawful and right, does not arise only from the Occasion of the War, but also from incident Causes in the Course of it.	1187
IV. Some Things may by Consequence be acted without any Injustice, which would be no ways lawful, had they been purposely and originally designed.	1187
V. What we may do against them who supply our Enemies with Necessaries, explained by Distinctions.	1189
VI. Whether Fraud be lawful in War.	1194
VII. Fraud, in its negative Act, is not of itself unlawful.	1198
VIII. Fraud, in its positive Act, distinguished either into such outward Acts as admit of several Constructions, or such as always signify the same by Agreement: Fraud in the former Sense unlawful.	1201
IX. Of that in the latter Sense, the Question is difficult.	1204
X. The Use of Words in another Sense, than that wherein we know they are understood, not always unlawful.	1208
XI. The Form of a Lye, as it is unlawful, consists in a Repugnancy to another's Right; this explained.	1212
XII. That it is lawful to speak what is false to Children, and People out of their Senses.	1215
XIII. And when it is to deceive one our Discourse is not directed to, and whom, without it, we might be allowed to deceive.	1215
XIV. And when our Discourse is directed to him, who would be willing to be deceived.	1216
XV. And when he who speaks only exercises that Prerogative he has over his Inferior.	1218

XVI. And perhaps, when the Life of an innocent Person, or something equal to it, cannot otherwise be preserved.	1221
XVII. What Authors have thought it lawful to tell an Enemy a Lye.	1222
XVIII. This is not to be stretched to the Words of a Promise.	1225
XIX. Nor to Oaths.	1225
XX. That it is however more generous, and more agreeable to Christian Simplicity, to abstain from Falshoods, even to our Enemies: This illustrated.	1226
XXI. That we ought not to force another to what is not lawful for him to do, tho' it be for us.	1229
XXII. But yet we may use the Service that he freely offers.	1230

CHAPTER II

How Subjects Goods are by the Law of Nations obliged for their Princes Debts; where also of Reprisals.

Sect. I. No Body, but the Heir, is naturally bound by another's Fact.	1231
II. But by the Law of Nations the Goods and Acts of Subjects are obliged for their Prince's Debts.	1232
III. An Example of this in seizing upon Men.	1235
IV. And upon Goods.	1238
V. That this takes Place only after our Right has been denied us, and when such a Denial is to be presumed; where also is shewed, that tho' the Thing be adjudged, yet it does properly neither give nor take away any Man's Right.	1239
VI. But this does not affect their Life.	1242
VII. The Distinction between the Civil Law and the Law of Nations, in this Case.	1243

CHAPTER III

Of a just and solemn War, according to the Right of Nations, and of the Declaration of such a War.

Sect. I. That a solemn War by the Right of Nations, is to be between different People.	1246
II. The Difference between a People, tho' acting unjustly, and a Company of Pirates and Robbers.	1247
III. Yet sometimes there happens a Change.	1251
IV. It is required in a solemn War, that he who makes it has the sovereign Power, and how this is to be understood.	1252
V. And that there be a publick Proclamation of it.	1252
VI. What in the Proclamation of a War is required by the Law of Nature, and what by the Law of Nations, distinctly explained.	1253
VII. That there are two Kinds of Declarations of War, one conditional, the other absolute.	1257
VIII. What in denouncing a War belongs to the Civil Law, and not to the Law of Nations.	1262
IX. War denounced against a Prince is denounced also against his Subjects, and all his Adherents.	1265
X. But not as considered in themselves, this illustrated by Examples.	1265
XI. The Reason why a Proclamation is requisite to some Effects of War.	1267
XII. That those Effects are not to be found in other Wars.	1268
XIII. Whether Acts of Hostility may commence as soon as ever War is declared.	1268
XIV. Whether there is any Occasion to declare War against him who has violated the Rights of Embassadors.	1269

CHAPTER IV

The Right of killing Enemies, and exercising other Violence on their Persons, in a solemn War.

Sect. I. The Effects of a solemn War explained in general.	1270
II. The Word lawful distinguished into that which may be done with Impunity, tho' not without a Crime, and that which is not criminal, tho' it were an Act of Virtue to let it alone; with the Addition of several Examples.	1271
III. That the Effects of a solemn War, considered in their Generality, relate to Lawfulness with Impunity.	1275
IV. Why such Effects were introduced.	1275
V. Proofs of these Effects.	1277
VI. By Virtue of this Right, all who are found in the Enemy's Territories, may be killed or hurt.	1280
VII. What if they came thither before the War.	1280
VIII. That the Subjects of Enemies are every where to be attacked, unless in the Territories of a neutral State.	1281
IX. That this Right of ill Treatment extends to Women and Children.	1283
X. And to Prisoners at any Time.	1284
XI. And even to such as are willing to surrender, but are not accepted.	1286
XII. And to such as surrender at Discretion.	1287
XIII. That this Right is very improperly ascribed to any other Cause, such as Retaliation or Obstinacy of Defence.	1288
XIV. That it extends also to Hostages.	1289
XV. That it is forbidden by the Law of Nations to poison any Body.	1290
XVI. Or to poison Weapons or Waters.	1291
XVII. But not any other Ways to spoil and corrupt the Waters.	1293
XVIII. Whether it be against the Law of Nations to employ Assassins, explained.	1293
XIX. Whether Ravishing of Women be against the Law of Nations.	1300

CHAPTER V

Of Wasting and Plundering.

Sect. I. What belongs to an Enemy may be spoiled, or carried off.	1303
II. Even Things that are sacred; and how this is to be understood.	1304
III. And Sepulchers; this with a Caution.	1312
IV. How far Tricking and Fraud may in this Case be allowed.	1312

CHAPTER VI

Of the Right to Things taken in War.

Sect. I. What the Law of Nature is, concerning Things taken in War.	1314
II. What the Law of Nations is in this Respect, with several Proofs relating to it.	1316
III. When moveable Goods are by the Right of Nations reputed lawful Prize.	1320
IV. When Lands are said to be acquired.	1322
V. Things not our Enemies are not to be acquired by War.	1323
VI. What of Things found in Enemies Ships.	1324
VII. Things taken from our Enemies are ours by the Law of Nations, tho' they took them from others, which is confirmed by several Proofs.	1325
VIII. That Things taken from the Enemy are not always theirs who take them.	1327
IX. That both Possession and Property may be naturally gained by another.	1328
X. A Distinction of Actions done in War into publick and private.	1330
XI. That the Lands taken are the Publick's or his who maintains the War.	1331
XII. That Things moveable, whether animate or inanimate, when taken by a private Act, are the Captor's.	1332
XIII. Unless the Civil Law ordains otherwise.	1333
XIV. That what is taken by a publick Act is the Publick's, or his who maintains the War.	1333

XV. But the Generals are usually allowed the Disposal of such Things.	1337
XVI. Who either bring them to the Treasury.	1337
XVII. Or divide them among the Soldiers, and how this is done.	1339
XVIII. Or suffer them to be plundered.	1345
XIX. Or grant them to some others.	1347
XX. Or dividing them into Shares and Parts, dispose of some one Way, some another, and how?	1347
XXI. Sometimes the Booty is imbezzed.	1349
XXII. That a Law, or any other Act of the Will, may alter something of this common Right.	1351
XXIII. Thus sometimes the Spoil is given to Confederates.	1351
XXIV. Sometimes to Subjects, which is illustrated by several Examples both by Land and Sea.	1352
XXV. What Use may be made of what has been here said.	1357
XXVI. Whether Things taken out of the Dominions of either Party, be lawful Prize.	1357
XXVII. How particularly proper this Right is to a solemn War.	1358

CHAPTER VII

Of the Right over Prisoners.

Sect. I. All Prisoners in a solemn War are by the Law of Nature Slaves.	1360
II. And their Posterity.	1362
III. That any Thing is done to them with Impunity.	1362
IV. That all that belongs to the Prisoners, even what is incorporeal, is his who makes them Prisoners.	1363
V. The Reason why this was ordained.	1364
VI. Whether Prisoners may make their Escape.	1366
VII. Whether they may resist him whose Prisoners they are.	1370
VIII. That this Right was not always allowed in every Nation.	1371
IX. Nor now among Christians, and what is introduced in its Stead.	1372

CHAPTER VIII

Of the Jurisdiction that Victors gain over those they conquer.

- Sect. I. That Sovereignty, whether in King or People, may be acquired by War; and the Effects of such an Acquisition. 1374
- II. That a despotick Power may be acquired over a People, and then they cease to be a State. 1377
- III. That sometimes these two Powers are intermixed. 1378
- IV. That all that belongs to a People, even what is incorporeal, may be acquired by War; where the Question concerning the Thessalian Bond is treated of. 1378

CHAPTER IX

Of the Right of Postliminy

- Sect. I. The Original of the Word Postliminium. 1381
- II. Where this Right takes Place. 1383
- III. That some Things return, and some are recovered, by this Right of Postliminy. 1384
- IV. This Right of Postliminy is of Force in Peace and War, and what if nothing be said of it in Peace. 1384
- V. When a Man who is free, may during the War, return by this Right of Postliminy. 1388
- VI. What Rights he may recover, and what not. 1389
- VII. That all Rights in regard to him are restored. 1390
- VIII. Why they who surrender themselves are not capable of the Right of Postliminy. 1390
- IX. How a People may obtain this Right of Postliminy. 1393
- X. What Rights of the Civil Law those who return by Postliminy have. 1395
- XI. How Slaves are recovered by Postliminy, how Fugitives, and how those who are redeemed. 1399
- XII. Whether Subjects may be recovered by Postliminy. 1401

XIII. That Lands are recovered by Postliminy.	1401
XIV. What Difference was formerly observed in Relation to Moveables.	1403
XV. What the Law says now of Moveables.	1405
XVI. What Things are recoverable without this Right of Postliminy.	1406
XVII. That the Civil Law of some States makes Alterations in what Regards their own Subjects.	1407
XVIII. How Postliminy was observed among those who were not Enemies.	1407
XIX. When this Right may now be in Force.	1409

CHAPTER X

Some Advices concerning what is done in an unjust War.

Sect. I. In what Sense Honour and Conscience may be said to forbid what Law permits.	1411
II. This applied to what is allowed by the Law of Nations.	1414
III. What is done in an unjust War is in itself unjust.	1416
IV. Who are hereby obliged to Restitution, and how far they are so.	1416
V. Whether Things taken in an unjust War are to be restored by the Captors.	1417
VI. And whether by him who is in Possession of them.	1418

CHAPTER XI

The Right of Killing in a just War, qualified.

Sect. I. That some Acts in a just War are unjust in themselves.	1420
II. Who may be killed, according to internal justice.	1422
III. No Man can justly be killed for his Misfortunes; as they, for Instance, who are forced to follow a Party.	1423
IV. Nor for a middle Fault, a Fault between Misfortune and Fraud; the Nature of which is explained.	1425

V. The principal Authors of a War to be distinguished from those drawn into it.	1431
VI. That in the very Authors we must distinguish the probable Reasons from the improbable ones.	1432
VII. That even to Enemies who have deserved Death, the Punishment may oftentimes rightly be remitted.	1434
VIII. We must take all possible Care that the Innocent be not, tho' without our designing it, killed.	1439
IX. Children to be spared, and Women unless highly criminal, and also old Men.	1439
X. The Clergy and Scholars to be spared.	1443
XI. And also Husbandmen.	1445
XII. Merchants, and the like.	1446
XIII. And Prisoners.	1446
XIV. That those who are willing to surrender upon reasonable Terms are to be accepted.	1449
XV. They are also to be spared who surrender at Discretion.	1450
XVI. Which holds good, provided they were not guilty of some very enormous Crime before; and how this is to be understood.	1451
XVII. Offenders may be pardoned, on Account of their Multitude.	1454
XVIII. That Hostages must not be put to Death, unless personally faulty.	1455
XIX. All needless Fights and Skirmishes to be avoided.	1456

CHAPTER XII

The Right of Wasting, and such other Violences, qualified.

Sect. I. What Wasting is just, and how far it is so.	1457
II. That we should keep from wasting of a Thing that is of Service to us, and not in the Enemy's Power.	1459
III. Or if there be probable Hopes of a speedy Victory.	1463
IV. If the Enemy can be supplied any other Way.	1464
V. If the Thing itself be of no Use for the Support of the War.	1466

VI. This especially ought to take Place in Things sacred; or thereunto belonging.	1467
VII. And in Burial Places.	1470
VIII. The Advantages which arise from this Moderation, remarked.	1472

CHAPTER XIII

The Right over Things taken in War, qualified.

Sect. I. That the Goods of the Enemies Subjects taken in War may be detained by Way of Debt.	1475
II. But not for the Punishment of another's Crime.	1476
III. By Debt is here understood the consequent Charges of a War. Instances of this.	1477
IV. Humanity bids us not use this Right to the utmost.	1478

CHAPTER XIV

Moderation in Regard to Prisoners.

Sect. I. How far the Right of seizing upon Men, does by Vertue of an internal Justice, extend.	1481
II. What a Master may do to a Slave, by the Right of internal Justice.	1482
III. It is not lawful to kill a Slave who is innocent.	1484
IV. Nor to punish him unmercifully.	1485
V. Nor to lay too hard Labour upon him.	1487
VI. The improved Stock how far the Master's, and how far the Slave's.	1489
VII. Whether Slaves may run away.	1495
VIII. Whether the Children of Slaves are the Master's, and how far they are so.	1495
IX. What is to be done where the Slavery of Prisoners is not in use.	1496

CHAPTER XV

Moderation in obtaining Empire and Sovereignty.

Sect. I. How far internal Justice allows the Gaining of Empire.	1498
II. To wave this Right over the Conquered is a very commendable Act.	1499
III. Either by mixing them with the Conquerors.	1500
IV. Or by leaving the Sovereignty in the Hands of those who possessed it before.	1501
V. Sometimes putting Garrisons into Places.	1503
VI. Sometimes imposing Taxes and such like Charges upon them.	1503
VII. The Advantage of this Moderation.	1504
VIII. Examples of it; and of the Form of Government among the Conquered, changed.	1506
IX. If the Sovereignty must be assumed, that Part of it be left to the Conquered.	1507
X. Or at least some Shew of Liberty.	1508
XI. Especially in Religion.	1509
XII. At least we ought to use the Conquered with Mercy, and why.	1509

CHAPTER XVI

Moderation concerning those Things which by the Law of Nations have not the Benefit of Postliminy.

Sect. I. That internal Justice requires that what is taken away by an Enemy in an unjust War, be restored.	1512
II. Examples of this.	1513
III. Whether any Thing may be deducted.	1515
IV. The People, or Part of them to be restored, if unjustly possessed.	1517
V. In what Time the Obligation of Restitution ceases.	1518
VI. What is to be done in a dubious Case.	1518

CHAPTER XVII

Of Neuters in War.

- Sect. I. Nothing is to be taken from those we are at Peace with, but upon extreme Necessity, and with a Design to restore the full Value. 1519
- II. Some Instances of Precepts about such a Moderation. 1519
- III. How Neuters are to behave themselves towards those who are engaged in War. 1525

CHAPTER XVIII

Of private Actions in a publick War.

- Sect. I. Whether a private Person is allowed to do a publick Enemy a Mischief, explained by the Principles of the Law of Nature, the Law of Nations, and the Civil Law. 1527
- II. What may they by internal Justice do against an Enemy who take up Arms, or equip a Fleet, at their own Expence. 1530
- III. What may they do in Respect of the State they are Subjects of. 1530
- IV. What the Law of Christian Charity requires of them. 1531
- V. How a private War may be mixt with a publick one. 1531
- VI. What he stands obliged to, who, without a Commission attacks and hurts an Enemy, explained with a Distinction. 1532

CHAPTER XIX

Of Faith between Enemies.

- Sect. I. That one's Word or Faith is to be kept with all Sorts of Enemies. 1533
- II. The Opinion refuted, which denies that Faith is to be kept with Pirates and Tyrants. 1536
- III. The Objection answered, that such deserve Punishment; and it is shewn that this is not minded when we treat with them as such. 1537
- IV. That it signifies nothing to urge that the Promise was extorted by Fear, if the Promiser was not himself affrighted. 1538

V. Or if there passed an Oath, tho' with Men such a Violation is not punishable.	1538
VI. The same applied to the Wars of a Sovereign against his Subjects.	1539
VII. Here comes in a particular Difficulty relating to the Promises made to Subjects, whether such Promises, by Reason of the sovereign Power, do oblige.	1540
VIII. And it is shewn, that such Promises are confirmed by the Oath of the State.	1541
IX. Or if the Promise be made to a third Person.	1543
X. How the publick State may be changed.	1543
XI. That Fear in a solemn War is by the Law of Nations no just Exception.	1543
XII. What is to be understood by such a Fear as is allowed by the Law of Nations.	1545
XIII. That Faith is to be kept even with the Perfidious.	1545
XIV. But not if the Condition ceases; which happens when the other refuses to stand to his Part of the Agreement.	1546
XV. Nor if there is a just Compensation opposed.	1547
XVI. Tho' by Virtue of another Contract.	1548
XVII. Or of some Damage done.	1548
XVIII. Or for some Punishment due.	1548
XIX. How these take Place in War.	1549

CHAPTER XX

Of the publick Faith by which War is concluded; where also of Treaties of Peace, of Lots, of Set Combats, of Arbitration, of Surrenders, of Hostages, and of Pawns.

Sect. I. The Division of Faith between Enemies, agreeable to the Order of what follows.	1551
II. The Power of making Peace is in the King, if the Government be regal.	1551

III. What if the King be an Infant, mad, a Prisoner, or an Exile?	1552
IV. In an Aristocratical or Democratical State, this Power is in the Majority.	1553
V. How the Sovereignty, or any Part of it, or the Revenues of the Crown, may be validly alienated to obtain Peace.	1553
VI. How far the People, or his Successors, are obliged by a Peace made by the King.	1555
VII. That the Goods of Subjects may by a Peace be granted away for the publick Good, but with the Condition of repairing the Lots.	1556
VIII. What of Things already lost in War?	1557
IX. No Distinction here between Things got by the Law of Nations, and those by the Civil Law.	1557
X. What is done for a publick Good, is taken by Foreigners to be what is universally approved of.	1558
XI. A general Rule for the interpreting Articles of Peace.	1558
XII. In doubtful Cases it is to be believed that the Agreement was, that Things should remain as they are.	1559
XIII. What if it should be agreed, that Things should be restored to the same Condition they were in before the War begun.	1560
XIV. Then they who were before free, and had voluntarily submitted themselves, are not to be restored.	1560
XV. Damages by War, if in Doubt, are supposed to be forgiven.	1561
XVI. But not those which before the War were due to private Persons.	1562
XVII. Punishments also before the War publickly due, if in Doubt, are to be presumed forgiven.	1563
XVIII. What of the Right of private Persons to Punishment.	1563
XIX. That Right, which before the War was publickly claimed, but disputed, is easily presumed to be passed by.	1564
XX. Things taken after Peace to be restored.	1564
XXI. Some Rules of Agreement, whereby Things taken in War are to be restored.	1564
XXII. Of the Fruits and Profits.	1565
XXIII. Of the Names of Countries.	1566

XXIV. Of the Reference to some former Agreement, and of the Obstruction there.	1566
XXV. Of Delay.	1566
XXVI. In a doubtful Case the Interpretation is to make against him, who prescribed the Conditions.	1567
XXVII. That there is a Distinction between giving new Occasions of War, and breaking the Peace.	1567
XXVIII. How a Peace may be broke by doing contrary to what is supposed to be in every Peace.	1568
XXIX. What if we be invaded by Allies.	1569
XXX. What if by Subjects, and how their Act may be judged approved.	1569
XXXI. What if Subjects serve under another Prince?	1570
XXXII. What if Subjects be injured; this explained by a Distinction.	1571
XXXIII. What if Allies? with a Distinction too.	1571
XXXIV. How a Peace may be broken by doing contrary to what is expressed in the Peace.	1572
XXXV. Whether any Distinction is to be made between the Articles of Peace?	1572
XXXVI. What if some Penalty be added?	1573
XXXVII. What if hindred by absolute Necessity.	1573
XXXVIII. The Peace shall stand firm, if the injured Party be willing to it.	1574
XXXIX. How a Peace may be broken, by doing what is contrary to the Nature of every Peace.	1574
XL. What comes under the Notion of Friendship.	1574
XLI. Whether to entertain Subjects and Exiles be contrary to Friendship.	1575
XLII. How War may be ended by Lots.	1576
XLIII. How by a Duel or set Combat, and whether it be lawful.	1577
XLIV. Whether the Fact of the King does in this Case oblige the People.	1580
XLV. Who is to be judged the Conqueror.	1580

XLVI. How War may be ended by Arbitration; and here Arbitration is to be understood without an Appeal.	1581
XLVII. Arbitrators in doubtful Cases bound to Equity.	1583
XLVIII. Arbitrators ought not to judge of Possessions.	1584
XLIX. How far the Force of pure Surrender extends.	1584
L. What is the Duty of the Conqueror, with Respect to those who thus surrender.	1586
LI. Of a conditional Surrender.	1589
LII. Who may and ought to be given for Hostages.	1589
LIII. What Right is given over Hostages.	1590
LIV. Whether Hostages may lawfully make their Escape.	1591
LV. Whether an Hostage may be lawfully detained upon any other Account.	1591
LVI. Upon the Death of the Principal, the Hostage to be free.	1592
LVII. The King dying, whether the Hostage may be retained.	1593
LVIII. That Hostages are sometimes obliged, as Principals; and one of them is not bound for the Fact of another.	1593
LIX. What Obligation lies upon Pawns.	1593
LX. The Right of Redemption when lost.	1594

CHAPTER XXI

Of Faith during War, where of the Cessation of Arms, of Safe Conduct, and the Ransoming of Prisoners.

Sect. I. What a Truce, or Cessation of Arms, is, and whether it be a Time of Peace or War.	1595
II. The Original of the Word Induciae.	1598
III. Upon the ending of a Truce there is no Need of denouncing War again.	1599
IV. How the Time of a Truce is to be computed.	1599
V. When it begins to bind.	1601
VI. What may be lawfully done during a Truce.	1602

VII. Whether one may retire, and repair Breaches, or the like.	1603
VIII. A Distinction concerning seizing of Places.	1603
IX. Whether he may return who was forcibly detained, during the Truce?	1604
X. Of the particular Clauses of a Truce, and what Queries usually arise from thence.	1605
XI. A Truce broken on one Side, the other may renew the War.	1606
XII. What if some Penalty be added.	1606
XIII. When the Actions of private Persons break the Truce.	1606
XIV. Free Passage, without a Truce, how to be interpreted?	1607
XV. Who may come under the Name of Soldiers.	1607
XVI. To go, to come, to depart, how to be here understood.	1608
XVII. How this extends to Persons.	1609
XVIII. How far unto Goods.	1609
XIX. Who may come under the Name of Attendants, and of a Nation.	1609
XX. Whether a Passport be valid upon the Death of the Party who granted it.	1610
XXI. What if it be given only during the Pleasure of the Granter?	1610
XXII. Whether one is intitled to Security beyond that Territory.	1611
XXIII. The Redemption of Prisoners favourable.	1611
XXIV. Whether such a Redemption can be forbidden by any Law, explained.	1612
XXV. The Right in a Prisoner may be transferred.	1613
XXVI. The Ransom of one may be due to more than one.	1613
XXVII. Whether the Ransom agreed upon may be made void, because his Estate and good Circumstances were then unknown.	1613
XXVIII. What Goods of a Prisoner belong to the Captor.	1614
XXIX. Whether the Heir be chargeable with the Prisoner's Ransom.	1615
XXX. Whether he who is released to free another, ought to return, the other being dead.	1615

CHAPTER XXII

Of the Faith of Generals and Officers.

Sect. I. The several Kinds of Officers.	1617
II. How far an Agreement made by them obliges the sovereign Power.	1618
III. Or gives Occasion to such an Obligation.	1619
IV. What if any Thing be done contrary to Command? This explained by Distinctions.	1619
V. In such a Case, whether the other Party stands obliged.	1621
VI. What the Generals, or other Persons in Commission, can do about or for those under their Command.	1621
VII. It is not in the Power of Generals to make a Peace.	1621
VIII. Whether they may grant a Truce? This distinguished.	1622
IX. What Protection of Persons or Things may be granted by them.	1623
X. Such Agreements are to be taken in a strict Sense, and why.	1625
XI. How a Surrender accepted by a General is to be understood.	1625
XII. How that Caution is to be understood, if the King or People please.	1625
XIII. How the Promise of delivering up a Town is to be understood.	1625

CHAPTER XXIII

Of the Faith or Promises of private Persons during the War.

Sect. I. That Faith given by private Men to a publick Enemy is not binding, confuted.	1626
II. Faith given to Pirates and Thieves is binding, and how far it is so.	1626
III. A Minor here not excepted.	1627
IV. Whether a Mistake excuses it.	1627
V. An Objection drawn from a publick Advantage, answered.	1627
VI. The aforesaid Observations applied to our Parole of returning to Prison.	1628

VII. To our Word and Honour of not returning to such a Place, or of never bearing Arms.	1629
VIII. Of not making an Escape.	1630
IX. A Prisoner taken by one, cannot yield himself to another.	1630
X. Whether private Men may be compelled by their Sovereign, to perform what they have promised.	1630
XI. What Interpretation is to be allowed in such Promises.	1631
XII. In what Sense we must take these Words of Life, Cloaths, the Coming of Relief.	1631
XIII. Who may be said to return to the Enemy.	1631
XIV. What Relief is sufficient when the Affair is a Surrender, in Case the Place be not relieved.	1631
XV. The Manner of executing a Promise makes no Condition of it.	1632
XVI. Of the Hostages or Bail for such Promises.	1632

CHAPTER XXIV

Of Faith tacitly given.

Sect. I. How one's Faith may be tacitly engaged.	1633
II. An Example of this in one desiring to be received into Protection by any Prince or People.	1633
III. In one who desires or admits a Parley.	1634
IV. But he may promote his own Interest, provided that he does not injure the other he is in Conference with.	1635
V. Of some dumb Signs to which Use and Custom have given a Signification.	1636
VI. Of the silent Approbation of a Treaty.	1636
VII. When a Penalty or Punishment is presumed to be tacitly remitted.	1637

CHAPTER XXV

The Conclusion, with Exhortations to preserve Faith and seek Peace.

Sect. I. Admonition to Princes to keep their Words.	1638
II. The Design of War to settle a firm Peace.	1639
III. Peace to be embraced, tho' with Loss, especially among Christians.	1640
IV. That this is for the Advantage of the Conquered.	1640
V. And of the Conqueror.	1641
VI. And of those whose Affairs are in a doubtful Posture.	1643
VII. That Peace once made ought to be religiously maintained.	1643
VIII. The Author's Wish, and the Conclusion of the Work.	1643