

Contents

1. Introduction 3
  1. A Problem about Luck for Libertarians 6
  2. A Modest Libertarian Proposal 9
  3. Deciding, the Time of Action, and Free Will 14
  4. Agents' Abilities 17

2. Free Will and Neuroscience 30
  1. Conceptual Matters 31
  2. Libet's Work 32
  3. Free Will 40
  4. Further Testing 42
  5. Conclusion 45

3. Libertarianism, Luck, and Control 49
  1. A Task for Libertarians 50
  2. Kane on Luck and Control 51
  3. O'Connor on Active Power 53
  4. Clarke on Agent Causation 56
  5. Persisting Intentions and Control 61
  6. Luck Remains a Problem 63
  7. Some Recent History 75
  8. Conclusion 76

4. Frankfurt-style Cases, Luck, and Soft Libertarianism 81
  1. Introducing Frankfurt-style Cases and Clarifying PAP 82

2. A Frankfurt-style Story and Alternative Possibilities 87
3. Soft Libertarianism and Frankfurt-style Cases 95

5. A Daring Soft Libertarian Response to Present Luck 105
  1. Leeway 105
  2. Luck and Modest Libertarianism 106
  3. Daring Soft Libertarianism 111
  4. Daring Soft Libertarianism and the Problem of Present Luck 117
  5. Objections and Replies 123
  6. Little Agents 129
  7. Conclusion 133

6. Compatibilism: Objections and Replies 137
  1. The Consequence Argument 137
  2. The Manipulation Argument 138
  3. The No-Chance Idea Introduced 144
  4. Fischer and Ravizza on Moral Responsibility 146
  5. Application to the No-Chance Idea, Proposition 2 155
  6. Semicompatibilism and Traditional Compatibilism 157

7. My Compatibilist Proposal: Objections and Replies 163
  1. A History-Sensitive Compatibilism 164
  2. Dennett's Critique 173
  3. Arpaly's Critique 179
  4. Kapitan's Critique and the Zygote Argument 184
  5. Conclusion 195

8. Conclusion 199
  1. Compatibilist and Libertarian Sufficient Conditions for Free Action 200
  2. Two Thought Experiments 202
  3. Conclusion 206

References 209

Index 217