

Contents

	page
Preface	ix
1 Introduction	1
1 The perspective of scientific realism	1
2 The plasticity of perception	7
2 The semantics of observation predicates	7
3 The conceptual exploitation of sensory information	14
4 The expansion of perceptual consciousness	25
5 The argument from measuring instruments	36
6 Some consequences	41
3 The plasticity of understanding	46
7 The analytic/synthetic distinction	46
8 Meaning and understanding	54
9 Translation: some competing views	63
10 Communication and commensurability	75
11 Intertheoretic reduction and conceptual progress	80
4 Our self-conception and the mind/body problem	89
12 One's knowledge of other minds	89
13 Self-knowledge: a preliminary look	95
14 The incongruent nature of the P-theory	100
15 The mind/body problem	107
16 The expansion of introspective consciousness	116
5 Sentential epistemologies and the natural science of epistemic engines	121
17 Normative epistemology: the problem in perspective	121

18	The sentential kinematics of orthodox epistemology	125
19	Continuity: the problem of the early stages	127
20	The poverty of the ISA approach: further considerations	137
21	Other horizons	142
	Bibliography	152
	Index	155