

Contents

Preface	page xi
Part One The Metaphysical Background	1
1 Persons in the Material World	3
Three Questions	4
Beyond Biology	12
An Overview	20
A Philosophical Stance	22
2 The Very Idea of Constitution	27
A Description of Constitution	29
The Road to Essentialism	35
A Definition of 'Constitution'	39
Having Properties Derivatively	46
Conclusion	58
3 The First-Person Perspective	59
First-Person Phenomena	60
Features of the First-Person Perspective	69
Indispensability of the First-Person Perspective	76
A Look at Other Views	79
Conclusion	88
Part Two The Constitution View Explained	89
4 The Constitution View of Human Persons	91
What a Human Person Is	91
Mental Properties	101

Theses About Human Persons	105
My Body/Myself	110
Conclusion	116
5 Personal Identity over Time	118
Other Views of Personal Identity over Time	119
The Constitution View of Personal Identity over Time	132
Is Bodily Transfer Impossible?	141
Conclusion	146
6 The Importance of Being a Person	147
Moral Agency	148
Rational Agency	158
Some Cognitive and Practical Capacities	159
Unity of Consciousness	161
Conclusion	163
Part Three The Constitution View Defended	165
7 The Coherence of the Idea of Material Constitution	167
Constitution and Incoherence	169
Constitution and Mereology	179
Constitution and Supervenience	185
Conclusion	189
8 The Coherence of the Constitution View of Human Persons	191
Constitution Is Not Mere ‘Coincidence’	191
The “How Many” Problem and Linguistic Incoherence	197
Is There a “Fetus Problem”?	204
A Counterexample on Offer	208
Conclusion	212
9 In Favor of the Constitution View	213
Yes, Materialism	213
Dualism and Its Desiderata	216
Taking Persons Seriously	218
Materialistic Competitors	222
Conclusion	228
Index	231