Contents

Introduction: Why Is Empathy So Important? vii
Jean Decety

I Philosophical and Anthropological Perspectives on Empathy 1

1 Empathy without Isomorphism: A Phenomenological Account 3
Dan Zahavi and Søren Overgaard

2 Empathy, Evolution, and Human Nature 21
Allan Young

II The Contribution of Social Psychology 39

3 The Empathy-Altruism Hypothesis: Issues and Implications 41
C. Daniel Batson

4 It's More than Skin Deep: Empathy and Helping Behavior across Social Groups 55
Stephanie Echols and Joshua Correll

5 Empathy Is Not Always as Personal as You May Think: The Use of Stereotypes in Empathic Accuracy 73
Karyn L. Lewis and Sara D. Hodges

III Evolutionary Roots of Empathy 85

6 Empathy in Primates and Other Mammals 87
Frans B. M. de Waal

IV The Development of Empathy 107

7 Nature and Forms of Empathy in the First Years of Life 109
Sharee Light and Carolyn Zahn-Waxler
Contents

8 Social-Cognitive Contributors to Young Children’s Empathic and Prosocial Behavior 131
Amrisha Vaish and Felix Warneken

9 Relations of Empathy-Related Responding to Children’s and Adolescents’ Social Competence 147
Nancy Eisenberg, Snjezana Huerta, and Alison Edwards

V The Neuroscience of Empathy and Caring 165

10 How Children Develop Empathy: The Contribution of Developmental Affective Neuroscience 167
Jean Decety and Kalina J. Michalska

11 Empathy and Compassion: A Cognitive Neuroscience Perspective 191
Abigail A. Marsh

12 The Cognitive Neuroscience of Sharing and Understanding Others’ Emotions 207
Jamil Zaki and Kevin Ochsner

VI Empathy in Clinical Practice 227

13 Clinical Empathy in Medical Care 229
Jodi Halpern

14 The Costs of Empathy among Health Professionals 245
Ezequiel Gleichgerricht and Jean Decety

15 The Empathic Response in Clinical Practice: Antecedents and Consequences 263
Charles R. Figley

16 The Paradox of Teaching Empathy in Medical Education 275
Johanna Shapiro

17 Empathy and Neuroscience: A Psychoanalytic Perspective 291
David M. Terman

Contributors 303
Author Index 305
Subject Index 319