Contents

	Preface	vii
	Preamble	ix
1.	OF CONSCIOUSNESS AND OTHER THINGS	I
	 What Consciousness is 	I
	2. The Continuity of Consciousness	9
	3. Judgement	20
	4. Desire and Will	26
	5. Past and Future	30
	6. The Method and the Goal of Metaphysics	33
2.	Various Conceptions of Physical Reality
	and their Common Upshot	39
	1. Naive Realism	43
	2. Subjective Idealism	45
	3. Naive Scientism	47
	4. Critical Scientism	48
	5. Phenomenalism	51
	6. Phenomenalist Instrumentalism	65
	7. The Physical Thing as Concrete Universal	67
	8. The Adverbial Theory of Perception	81
3.	The Vindication of Panpsychism	85
	First Argument for Panpsychism: It is superior to any other answer ever offered to a certain question,
	which is evidently meaningful	87
	Second Argument for Panpsychism: It makes the	_
	mind-body relationship more intelligible	96
	Third Argument for Panpsychism: It rightly takes as our clue to the nature of noumenal reality in general
	the one initial example we have of it	105
	Fourth Argument for Panpsychism: There is no
	conceivable sort of concrete actuality but sentience	110
	Some Objections to the Fourth Argument Considered	131

Contents

The Sentience of the Whole and the
SENTIENCE OF THE PARTS		141
Relations		162
 Properties and Individual Essences 		162
2. Ideal Relations		180
3. Holistic Relations		187
4. 'Prehending' and 'Objectification'		225
The Question of External Relations		232
6. Concluding Remarks on the Status of Relations		247
THE ABSOLUTE		250
1. Main Conclusion		250
2. The Compounding of Consciousness		253
3. Judgement Again, Memory and Causal Influence	2	264
4. Types of Monism		271
No	otes	280
In	dex	286
	RELATIONS 1. Properties and Individual Essences 2. Ideal Relations 3. Holistic Relations 4. 'Prehending' and 'Objectification' 5. The Question of External Relations 6. Concluding Remarks on the Status of Relations THE ABSOLUTE 1. Main Conclusion 2. The Compounding of Consciousness 3. Judgement Again, Memory and Causal Influence 4. Types of Monism	SENTIENCE OF THE PARTS RELATIONS 1. Properties and Individual Essences 2. Ideal Relations 3. Holistic Relations 4. 'Prehending' and 'Objectification' 5. The Question of External Relations 6. Concluding Remarks on the Status of Relations THE ABSOLUTE 1. Main Conclusion 2. The Compounding of Consciousness 3. Judgement Again, Memory and Causal Influence