

Contents

Preface	vii
I. Kinds of Agreement and Disagreement	1
1. Analysis: Its Scope and Purpose
2. Disagreement in Belief and in Attitude
3. Current Views
4. The Dual Nature of the Issues of Ethics
II. Working Models	20
1. Parallels between Ethical Judgments and Imperatives
2. The Factors Which Make Ethics Open to Reasoning and Inquiry
3. Linguistic Flexibility
4. Summary
III. Some Pragmatic Aspects of Meaning	37
1. The Relevance of a Study of Language
2. Examples Illustrating Emotive Meaning
3. The Difficulty of Clarifying a Pragmatic Sense of Meaning
4. Dispositional Properties
5. Meaning Conceived as a Dispositional Property of Words
6. The Differentiae of Emotive Meaning
7. Descriptive Meaning; Linguistic Rules
8. Interrelationships of Meaning; Metaphor
9. Other Kinds of Meaning; Dependent and Independent Emotive Meaning
10. Summary
IV. First Pattern of Analysis	81
1. Emotive Aspects of "Good"
2. Linguistic Flexibility and Dependent Emotive Meaning
3. The Distinguishing Feature of the First Pattern—That of Severely Restricting the Descriptive Meaning of Ethical Terms
4. Some Conspicuous Ambiguities
5. Possible Misunderstandings
6. Naturalism and Nonnaturalism
V. First Pattern: Method	111
1. Supporting Reasons
2. Examples Illustrating the Modus Operandi of These Reasons
3. Parallels between Personal and Interpersonal Decisions
4. The Degree to Which Ethical Methods Can Approach Finality

VI. Persuasion	139
1. Nonrational Methods
2. Examples; Elements of Rationality That Usually Attend Persuasion
3. Self-Persuasion
VII. Validity	152
1. Validity in Ethics as Compared with Validity in Inductive and Deductive Logic
2. Evaluation of Methods
3. The Degree to Which Such Evaluation Is Implicit in Analysis Itself
4. Technical Elaborations
5. A Variant Sense of "True," and Its Bearing on the Problem
VIII. Intrinsic and Extrinsic Value	174
1. The Question: Can Ends Be Established Independently of Means?
2. Basic Conceptions; Current Assumptions
3. Types of Agreement in Attitude; Agreement on Means without Agreement on Ends
4. Compound and Complex Agreement; Reinforcement
5. The Methodological Indispensability of Means
6. The Growth of Means into Ends
7. Consequences for Normative Ethics; Ends and Focal Aims
8. Summary
IX. Second Pattern of Analysis; Persuasive Definitions	206
1. The Distinguishing Feature of the Second Pattern—That of Recognizing Rich and Varied Descriptive Meanings for the Ethical Terms, in Addition to Emotive Meaning
2. Definitions Which Plead a Cause
3. The Role of These Definitions in Ethics
4. Implicit Use of Them in Plato
X. Second Pattern: Method	227
1. The Practical Equivalence of the Patterns
2. Detailed Exemplification of Methods
3. Further Parallels
XI. Moralists and Propagandists	243
1. Exhortation for and against Exhortation
2. "Propaganda" as a Neutral, Scientific Term
3. "Propaganda" Persuasively Defined
4. Summary
XII. Some Related Theories	253
1. Central Aspects of John Dewey's Analysis *
2. Ayer, Russell, Carnap, and Some Others
3. Perry on the Inclusiveness of Interests

4. Moore and Indefinability .
5. Hume .

XIII. Further Observations on the Function of Definitions 277

1. Persuasive Quasi-Definitions
2. Detached Definitions and Their Effect on Interests in Knowledge
3. Re-emphatic Definitions
4. Legal Definitions

XIV. Avoidability; Indeterminism 298

1. The Independence of Avoidability and Indeterminism
2. Avoidability Essential If Judgments Are to Guide Subsequent Conduct
3. Parallel Issues in the Theory of Punishment
4. Other Prerequisites for Judging
5. The Ethical Irrelevance of Indeterminism

XV. Practical Implications 319

1. A Normative Approach to Methodology
2. Typical Misconceptions of the Moral Implications of Science
3. Suggestions about the Proper Use of Science
4. Justifiable Uses of Persuasion
5. Conclusion

Index

337