

Christoph Henke

Common Sense
in Early 18th-Century
British Literature and Culture

---

Ethics, Aesthetics, and Politics, 1680–1750

DE GRUYTER

Contents

List of Illustrations — XI

- 1 The Discourse of Common Sense — 1
  - 1.1 The Argument: Common Sense as Compensation — 3
  - 1.2 A Short History of Common Sense in Philosophy and Criticism — 9
  - 1.3 The Discursive Formation of Early Eighteenth-Century Common Sense — 30

- 2 The Ethics of Common Sense — 44
  - 2.1 Good Sense and Good Taste: The Common-Sense Union of Ethics and Aesthetics – Shaftesbury and Pope — 45
  - 2.2 Perversions of Moral Sense – The Fable of the Bees — 63
  - 2.3 Life Ethic and Happiness – Samuel Johnson and Rasselas — 78

- 3 The Transgressions of Common Sense — 95
  - 3.1 “These Arrows that fly in the Dark”: Approaching Augustan Satire and Common Sense — 98
  - 3.2 “Good Sense Defaced”: Enthusiasm and False Learning – A Tale of a Tub and Peri Bathous — 104
  - 3.3 Human Nature, Reason, and Madness – A Satyr against Reason and Mankind, Gulliver’s Travels, and An Essay on Man — 128

- 4 The Politics of Common Sense — 165
  - 4.1 The Birth of Common Sense Discourse from the Spirit of Patriotism — 167
  - 4.2 English Common Sense Personified – Pasquin and the Many Lives of Common Sense — 186
  - 4.3 Nationalist Common Sense: Liberty and Revolution — 212

- 5 The Other of Common Sense — 227
  - 5.1 The Foreign Other – Robinson Crusoe and The Citizen of the World — 228
  - 5.2 The Female Other – The Rape of the Lock — 251

- 6 The Afterlife of Common Sense — 276

Bibliography — 287

- 1       Abbreviated Source References — 287
- 2       Historical Sources — 288
- 3       Critical Sources — 293

Author and Title Index — 304

Subject Index — 309