

BERKELEY'S RENOVATION OF PHILOSOPHY

by

GAVIN ARDLEY

MARTINUS NIJHOFF / THE HAGUE / 1968

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE	v
ABBREVIATIONS	xiii

I. Nature

CHAPTER I. THE PROBLEM OF THE EXACT SCIENCES	3
CHAPTER II: MATHEMATICS AND NATURE	9
(1) The consistency of Berkeley's philosophy	9
(2) Berkeley's critique of the received mathematical philosophy of Nature	10
(3) The immaterialist principle	11
(4) The rejection of Enthusiasm and Scepticism	12
(5) Appearance is reality	13
(6) The status of the esse percipi principle	14
(7) Common sense realism	15
(8) No primary/secondary quality bifurcation	16
(9) The rejection of "matter"	17
(10) The source of the current errors	17
(11) Cosmos	18
(12) Nature is essentially qualitative	19
(13) The operative function of mathematics and physics	20
(14) The employment of number	21
(15) The employment of geometry	22
(16) The function of natural philosophy	24
(17) Renovating the sciences	25
(18) Some modern discussions bearing on the esse percipi principle	26
CHAPTER III. THE ANTHROPOCENTRIC CHARACTER OF SPACE, TIME, AND MOTION	30
(1) The levels of treatment	30
(2) Relative and Absolute	31
(3) Berkeley's various aims	32

(4) The perplexities of false abstraction	33
(5) Visual Perception	35
(6) The interweaving of sensible extension time and motion with other sensations	35
(7) Public standards of space, time, and motion	37
(8) The Selection of Standards	39
(9) Primary and Secondary Qualities	40
(10) The liberation of space, time, and motion	41
CHAPTER IV. THE ANALOGY OF THE GRAMMAR OF NATURE	43
(1) Signs and visual language	43
(2) The consistent working of Nature	44
(3) The Grammar of Nature	44
(4) A hierarchy of knowledge	46
(5) The employment of the grammar of Nature	47
(6) Our knowledge of natural grammar is imperfect and incomplete	48
(7) The rigidity of the grammar of Nature, and the flexibility of the language of Nature	49
(8) The teleological universe	50
(9) The liberation of thought achieved by Berkeley	51
II. Common Sense
CHAPTER V. BERKELEY'S INTENTIONS	55
(1) The Unity of Berkeley's career	55
(2) "A gentleman and man of sense"	55
(3) Redeeming the time	58
(4) External and internal criticism	60
(5) The danger of premature system	61
CHAPTER VI. THE TWO KINDS OF METAPHYSICS	64
(1) Berkeley's allegiance to common sense	64
(2) Metaphysics v common opinion	67
(3) Common sense and metaphysics	69
(4) Plato as the prototype	71
(5) Berkeley and Plato	73
CHAPTER VII. PHILOSOPHICAL SCRUPLES: THEIR CAUSE AND CURE	77
(1) Scruples as the bane of philosophy	77
(2) The absurd	80
(3) The sceptical philosophy and its critics	84
(4) Ambiguities in the sceptical philosophy	86

TABLE OF CONTENTS

XI

(5) Berkeley and Hume: the capacity of the human understanding	88
(6) Berkeley and the modern therapeutic analysts	90
CHAPTER VIII. THE RÔLE OF COMMON SENSE	96
(1) The defence of common sense	96
(2) Berkeley's appreciation of common sense	99
(3) Berkeley's discovery of common sense	100
(4) Berkeley's statements about the rôle of common sense	103
(5) Recourse to the vulgar	106
CHAPTER IX. THE POTENTIALITY OF COMMON SENSE	108
(1) The adamantine core of common sense	108
(2) Common sense as inchoate wisdom	109
(3) Common sense as intelligence and ius naturale	114
(4) Making a cosmos	117
(5) Does Berkeley do justice to common sense?	120
(6) Common sense and anthropocentricity	124
(7) Privacy and Society	129
CHAPTER X. BERKELEY'S DIALECTIC	133
(1) All things to all men	133
(2) Is Berkeley a sceptic?	134
(3) Paradox	135
(4) Emergence from tribe	136
(5) Berkeley as rhetorician	138
(6) Remembrance of old things	140
(7) Berkeley as metaphysician	143
 III. Mystery
CHAPTER XI. THE MYSTERIOUS UNIVERSE	151
(1) Berkeley as hierophant	151
(2) The change of mood	152
(3) Education	156
(4) Berkeley as a charismatic	162
CHAPTER XII. THE EXACT SCIENCES	164
(1) The power of myths	164
(2) "Hypotheses non fingo"	166
(3) An interim analysis	171
(4) The inside view	173
INDEX	178