

Man

His Nature and Place in the World

by Arnold Gehlen

Translated by Clare McMillan and Karl Pillemer

with an Introduction by Karl-Siegbert Rehberg

Columbia University Press
NEW YORK 1988

Contents

Translators' Preface vii
Arnold Gehlen's Elementary Anthropology, by Karl-Siegbert Rehberg ix

Introduction

1. Man as a Special Biological Problem 3
2. A Critique of the Hierarchical Scheme 14
3. A Preliminary Definition of Man 24
4. Continuation of the Same Approach 32
5. Action and Language 38
6. Action and Impulses 43
7. The Excessive Nature of Impulses and Their Control 49
8. The Law of Relief: The Role of Consciousness 54
9. Animals and Their Environment: Herder's Contribution 65

Part I. The Special Morphological Place of Man

10. The Primitive Nature of Human Organs 79
11. Bolk's Theory and Other Related Theories 93
12. The Problem of Evolution 110

Part II. Perception, Movement, and Language

13. Fundamental Circular Processes in Interaction 119
14. The Further Development of Circular Processes 129
15. The Limits to Animals' Achievements 137
16. Visual Forms and Symbols 145
17. The Imagination of Movement and Sensation 167
18. Movement Symbolism 175
19. Two Roots of Language 181

20. Recognition: The Third Root of Language 184
21. The Theory of Play: The Fourth Root of Language 192
22. Broadening the Range of Experience 200
23. Higher Experiences in Movement 210
24. Sound Gestures: The Fifth Root of Language 216
25. Planned Actions 222
26. A Recapitulation of the Foundations of Language 226
27. The Element of Language Itself 230
28. The Further Development of Language, I 237
29. The Repercussions of the Development of Language:
The Idea 243
30. Repercussions Continued: The Mutual Approximation of the Internal and External Worlds 248
31. Silent Thinking 256
32. The Origin of Language 260
33. The Further Development of Lanugage, II 266
34. Images Peculiar to Language 276
35. Knowledge and Truth 283
36. The Certainty of Irrational Experience 294
37. Toward a Theory of Imagination 308

Part III. The Laws Governing Human Impulses; Character; the Problem of the Mind

38. Refutation of the Theory of Drives 321
39. The Two Laws Governing Impulses: The Hiatus 327
40. The World-Openness of Impulses 333
41. Additional Laws Pertaining to Human Impulses 344
42. The Excess of Impulses: The Law of Discipline 351
43. Character 365
44. A Few Problems Relating to the Mind 377

Notes 401

Index 415