

Roman Republican Augury

Freedom and Control

LINDSAY G. DRIEDIGER-MURPHY

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Texts and Abbreviations	xi
Introduction	1
0.1. Of Gods and Men	1
0.2. Why Now?	9
0.3. What Is Needed?	23
0.4. How? Four Guiding Principles	24
1. Do As I Say, Not As I Do? Report versus Reality in Augury	51
1.1. Introduction	51
1.2. Principle 1 in the High and Late Empire: Comments on Signification	56
1.3. Principle 1 in the High and Late Empire: Claims that Augural Rules Gave Humans the Freedom to Accept or Reject Signs	69
1.4. Principle 1 in the Middle (and Late) Republic: Claims that Human Awareness of Signs Determined their Validity	86
1.5. Principle 2 in the Early Principate: The Claim that Augural Rules Gave Humans Freedom to 'Create' Signs by Reporting Them	93
1.6. Principle 2 in the Late Republic: The Claim that Humans Contrived Auspication so as to Receive Favourable Signs and Avoid Receiving Unfavourable Ones	108
1.7. Conclusions	120
2. Convenience or Conversation? Why 'Watching the Sky' Was More than Wishful Thinking	127
2.1. Introduction	127
2.2. What Was Sky-Watching?	133
2.3. Did Sky-Watching Invariably Produce Signs?	137
2.4. Was Sky-Watching Technically Sufficient to Prohibit Assemblies?	143
2.5. Possible Objections: The Timing of Servare de Caelo	148
2.6. But Would It Actually Work?	155
Appendix: Ancient References to the Bibulus Affair	158

3. Out of Control? The Effects of Augury on Roman Public Life	161
3.1. Introduction	161
3.2. Motives, Part 1: Cicero, the Augurium Salutis , and the Limits of our Knowledge	168
3.3. Motives, Part 2: Two Methodological Problems and Two Abdicating Consuls	172
3.4. Motives, Part 3: The Consul, his Colleague, a Tribune, and Roman Respect for Augury	179
3.5. The Dynamics of State Divination	189
3.6. But Did It Really Matter?	193
3.7. Conclusion: When Signs Said No	200
Conclusion	203
Bibliography	209
Index Locorum	257
General Index	264