

Contents

Acknowledgments

1	The materialist's problem and some non-reductive solutions	1
1	1 Introduction	1
2	2 The nature of the problem	3
3	3 Davidson's dual aspect theory	8
4	4 Event identity	13
2	Supervenience and reduction	20
1	1 Supervenience and necessity: the options	20
2	2 Peacocke and Kripke	22
3	3 Disavowing reduction: signs of confusion	24
4	4 Translation and topic neutrality	25
5	5 The 'holism of the mental'	27
6	6 Résumé	28
7	7 Functionalism, reduction and topic neutrality	29
3	Behaviourism and stimulus materialism	35
1	1 Behaviourism, dispositions and physicalism	35
2	2 Covert behaviour and physicalism	37
3	3 Behaviour, introspection and physicalism	39
4	4 Smart and topic neutrality	40
5	5 The main weakness in stimulus materialism	42
6	6 Experience and stimulus materialism	43
7	7 Levin's theory	44
8	8 Topic neutrality and the realist theory of universals	46
4	The causal theory of mind	51
1	1 Two versions of the theory	51
2	2 Ambiguities in the realist theory of dispositions	53
3	3 The limits of mental representation	58
4	4 Kripke and the identity theory	60

5	The incompatibility of functionalism and Armstrong's theory of consciousness	67
6	Four arguments against the 'brain scanning' model of consciousness	69
7	Behaviourism and the causal theory: back to square one	75
5	The disappearance theory	79
1	Statement of the theory	79
2	Refutation of the theory	82
3	How its main exponents fail to see the problem	85
4	A world without tables	86
5	The limits of conceptual relativism	90
6	Reductive theories of perception	95
1	Perception, belief and behaviour	95
2	The principle of minimal empiricism	96
3	Perception, clairvoyance and the 'density theory'	98
4	Behaviourism and recognition	105
7	Matter: turning the tables	108
1	Introduction	108
2	Solidity: by impenetrability out of confusion	109
3	Secondary qualities as the ground of our Being	112
4	Potentiality and vacuity	113
5	The last ditch: a nameless residue	121
	Conclusion	124
	References	126
	Index	129