

Contents

Preface	ix
Introduction	1
1 Realism and the justification of logic	13
1. An opening contrast	13
2. Arguments against the solipsist	17
3. Arguments against a revised solipsism	20
4. Idealism's two mistakes	25
5. Objectivity of content/objectivity of truth	26
6. Externalism is not enough	32
7. Where the argument lies	35
2 Meaning and experience	39
1. The objectivity of truth	39
2. Three kinds of manifestationism	40
3. The manifestation constraint	46
4. Employing constraint C	53
5. The argument against realism	56
6. Three objections	62
7. In defence of constraint C	67
8. Reprise	77
3 Modesty and realism	79
1. A response	79
2. A translation manual for the cosmic exile	80
3. The world independent of us	82
4. A detailed proposal	83
5. An analogous proposal	88
6. Accommodating the stoic	89
7. The end of the new orthodoxy: general polemics	91
8. The real challenge	96

4	The logical constants: negation	100
	1. A condition of adequacy and opening polemics	100
	2. The proof-theoretic justification of logic	105
	3. The need for a semantic justification	108
	4. The experienceable justification of logic	114
	5. Negation, the core component	117
	6. An objection	123
	7. Experienceable negation in action	124
	8. Further polemics	125
	9. Bivalence is sufficient for realism	130
5	The logical constants and the objects of experience	133
	1. The nature of the problem	133
	2. A dilemma for the notion of non-conclusive proof	136
	3. The root of the problem	140
	4. Reversing an image: a metaphysical diversion	143
	5. The logical constants revisited	148
	6. The answer to all our problems	149
	7. A doubt forestalled	156
6	Objects	158
	1. A problem	158
	2. The need for the concept of sense	159
	3. A constraint on the account of sense	165
	4. Proposal for a molecular theory of sense	166
	5. The argument for the Complexity thesis	172
	6. The sense of a name	175
7	Perceptual experience: content and objects	179
	1. The argument so far	179
	2. Two questions about experience	181
	3. The objects of perception	183
	4. Perceptual content: some distinctions	187
	5. The distinctions applied	189
	6. The example case	193
	7. The argument	196
	8. Three objections	199

8	The range of experience and other minds	207
	1. Informational states do not limit the range of experience	208
	2. A further constraint on ascribing content	214
	3. Other minds: the problem	215
	4. A common proposal rejected	217
	5. Experiencing that another is in pain	218
	6. Private knowledge	223
	7. Pain: role and constraining criteria	224
	8. In conclusion	231
9	The range of experience: theoretical entities in science	233
	1. Semantic squabbles	233
	2. Two concepts of 'theoretical entity'	235
	3. Perceptual skills and effective decidability	236
	4. Reference and realism	243
	5. The meaningfulness of theoretical terms	245
	6. Anti-realism and scientific practice	246
	7. Three objections	247
	Coda	256
	Appendix 1 The logic of experience	257
	Appendix 2 Secondary qualities	267
	Bibliography	271
	Index	276