Preamble	1
. THE ABSOLUTENESS OF SAMENESS
1. A central problem of identity; and the theses of absoluteness and relativity of identity	15
2. Leibniz's Law and the difficulties of relative identity	18
3. Five ways for it to be false that $a \bar{g} b$	23
4. Possible examples of type-(4) relativity	27
5. Some cases that might be alleged to be of type (5)	28
6. Discussion of type-(4) cases	30
7. Discussion of type-(5) cases and some attempted amendments of Leibniz's Law	35
8. A mathematical example supposedly of type (5)	42
9. Conclusion concerning the Relativity of Identity, Thesis R	43
. OUTLINE OF A THEORY OF INDIVIDUATION
1. Proposition D and the rationale of the 'same what?' question	47
2. The identity of indiscernibles	55
3. Proposition D further explicated and amplified: preliminaries	57
4. D(ii) as the proper development of D	60
5. The argument for D(ii)	62
6. Lot's wife: and the notion of existence	66
7. Further D principles	68
8. Counting and some related concerns	71
. SORTAL CONCEPTS: AND THE CHARACTERISTIC ACTIVITY OR FUNCTION OR PURPOSE OF THEIR COMPLIANTS
1. The sortal predicates of natural kinds	77
2. The other sortal predicates	86
3. Problems of artifact identity	90
4. Two approaches to the problem of artifact identity	94

5. Summary of conclusions to date: and a methodological remark	99
6. Transition to Chapters Four and Five	100
4. ESSENTIALISM AND CONCEPTUALISM
1. Independence from the explicitly modal of the foregoing theory of individuation	103
2. Principles and maxims governing the derivation of a modest essentialism	104
3. The necessity of identity, and some asymmetrical necessities	109
4. Conceivability, theory and essence	112
5. Conceivability continued	115
6. Individuative essentialism and its consequences	117
7. That the logical impropriety and the uselessness of 'haecceitas' fully match the syntactic impropriety of the word	120
8. The essentialist 'must' and 'can'	120
9. Avoiding overspecificity	121
10. The essences of artifacts; and the essences of works of art	124
5. CONCEPTUALISM AND REALISM
1. Anti-realist conceptualism and anti-conceptualist realism	129
2. Four clarifications	131
3. A conventionalist reconstruction of our modal convictions: a conceptualist anti-realist view of essence	134
4. An hypothesis concerning the sources of anti-essentialism	137
5. An exaggeration of conceptualism, deprecated and mended by some truisms: and the reply to the anti-conceptualist realist begun	138
6. The perfect consonance of sober realism and sober conceptualism	141
7. The realist requirement restated, refurbished and satisfied	142
8. Concluding suggestions	145
6. PERSONAL IDENTITY
1. John Locke on persons	149
2. An objection of Joseph Butler: the charge of circularity	152
3. Another line of objection, and the requirement of continuity of consciousness restated to counter the charge of absurdity	154

4. The inadequacy of I_p , as of any pure or physicalistically uncontaminated 'remembering' condition of mental continuity. The involvement of remembering with the physical	155
5. The charge of circularity rephrased and reconsidered as a charge of non-effectiveness	160
6. Two senses in which a person may be supposed to transcend his body, one correct, the other impossible	163
7. Real possibility: the limits of personhood	169
8. The limits of personhood continued: and a formal difference between the vegetable and person concepts	173
9. Amnesia reconsidered, and man as an animal	176
10. Persons as social constructs and persons as given	179
11. Nature and naturalism	182
12. Conclusion: the abandonment of the *C condition: a small amendment to Locke; and an inconclusive postscript on the brain	187
