

Contents

Preface	7
Abbreviations	9
Introduction	11
I. Hare's Argument for the Prescriptivity of Moral Language	19
1.0 Introduction	19
1.1 Moral Philosophy	20
1.2 Evaluative Moral Judgements	25
1.3 Outlining Hare's Argument	30
1.4 Examining the Argument	32
1.5 Action-Guiding Statements of Facts	35
1.6 The 'Open-Question' Argument	39
1.7 Hare's Objection I	42
1.8 Hare's Objection II	49
II. Prescriptivism Developed and Challenged	55
2.0 Introduction	55
2.1 J. L. Austin on Speech Acts	56
2.2 The 'Sentence'/'Utterance'/'Judgement' Distinction	60
2.3 John R. Searle's First Objection	67
2.4 Searle's Second Objection	74
2.5 Inverted-commas Uses	77
2.6 Prescribing	79
2.7 Hare's View on Desires	83

2.8	Past Imperatives and Impossible Intentions	88
2.9	First- and Third-Person 'Ought'-Judgements	95
2.9.1	A Counter-Objection	100
2.9.2	Imperative Inferences	102
III.	Universalizability	105
3.0	Introduction	105
3.1	Hare's Universalizability-Thesis	109
3.2	Descriptive Meaning	114
3.3	Meaning-Rules	116
3.4	Descriptive and Evaluative Judgements	119
3.5	In Criticism of (U1) and (U2)	122
3.6	(U2) and Non-Universalizable Reasons	128
3.7	The Scope of Universal Principles	138
3.8	Supervenience	142
3.9	Hare's Latest Account of Supervenience	143
3.9.1	Substantial Supervenience	148
IV.	Relevant Facts and Rationality	152
4.0.	Introduction	152
4.1	The Creditor and the Debtor	153
4.2	Facts and Moral Reasoning	157
4.3	Relevant Available Facts	161
4.4	The Moral Tiro	165
4.5	Critical thinking decomposed	173

V. Conditional Representation	177
5.0 Introduction	177
5.1 Representation	178
5.2 Interpersonal Comparison Problems	182
5.3 The Prescriptivity of 'I'	187
5.4 Desires and Deliberation	191
5.5 Irrational Preferences	198
5.6 Imprudent Preferences	206
5.7 External Preferences	208
5.8 Critical Thinking in Multilateral Cases	211
5.9 In Criticism of the Prescriptivity of 'I'	216
Concluding Remarks	222
Bibliography	230
Index	242