Part One

CONCEPTIONS OF COGNITIVE RELATION IN THE NON-MARXIST EPISTEMOLOGICAL THEORIES

Chapter 1. INTERPRETATION OF COGNITION AS INTERACTION OF TWO NATURAL SYSTEMS . . . . .	21
1. Interpretation of Knowledge as the Result of a Causal Effect of the Object on the Subject. . . . .	21
2. The Theory of Cognitive "Equilibrium" Between Sub- ject and Object . . . . .	27
3. The View of Cognition as an Ensemble of the Subject's Physical Operations . . . . .	38
Chapter 2. THE INTERPRETATION OF COGNITION AS DETER- MINED BY THE STRUCTURE OF CONSCIOUSNESS . . . . .	48
1. The Problem of Substantiating Knowledge and "Radi- cal" Reflexion . . . . .	48
2. Transcendental Subject, Empirical Subject. The Con- ception of Self-Certainty of Transcendental Conscio- ness as Guarantee of the Objectiveness of Knowledge . .	62
3. The Fact of Knowledge and the Transcendental Inter- pretation of the Conditions of Its Possibility. . . . .	79
4. The Conception of the "Life World" and the Unique- ness of the Place of the Empirical Subject in the Struc- ture of Experience. . . . .	87
5. The Interpretation of Cognition as Conditioned by the Individual Consciousness and, at the Same Time, Mystifying the Essence of the Latter. The Ego, "the Others", and the World of Objects . . . . .	95

Part Two

THE MARXIST APPROACH: COGNITION AS SOCIALLY-MEDIATED HISTORICALLY DEVELOPING ACTIVITY OF REFLECTION

Chapter 1. REFLECTION. OBJECT-RELATED PRACTICAL ACTIVITY AND COMMUNICATION. . . . .	118
1. Sensory Information and Object-Related Knowledge . .	118

2. Illusions and Reality . . . . .	127
3. Cognition and Object-Related Practical Activity . . . . .	134
4. Reification of Knowledge, Communication, and the Social Nature of Cognition . . . . .	144
Chapter 2. THEORY AND THE WORLD OF OBJECTS. . . . . .	155
1. Observable and Non-Observable Objects. . . . .	155
2. Idealised and Real Objects. . . . .	166
Chapter 3. "ALTERNATIVE" WORLDS AND THE PROBLEM OF CONTINUITY OF EXPERIENCE . . . . .	174
1. Objectiveness of Knowledge and the Possibility of a Gap Between Perceptive and Conceptual Systems . . . . .	174
2. The Conception of Ontological Relativity . . . . .	180
3. Translation and the Problem of Understanding . . . . .	193
4. "Other Worlds" and the Successive Replacement of the Forms of Objectification of Knowledge . . . . .	210
Chapter 4. REFLEXION ABOUT KNOWLEDGE AND THE DEVEL- OPMENT OF COGNITION . . . . .	214
1. Self-Consciousness and Reflexion. Explicit and Implicit Knowledge. . . . .	214
2. Substantiation and Development of Knowledge. . . . .	218
3. Reflexion as a Unity of Reflection and Transformation of Its Object. . . . .	227
4. The Collective Subject. The Individual Subject . . . . .	232
5. How Is a Theory of Cognition Possible? . . . . .	248
CONCLUSION . . . . .	256
NOTES. . . . . .	262
