PART ONE THE CRITERION OF CERTAINTY

CHAPTER 1. THE NATURE OF CERTAINTY, TRUTH, AND PERSUASION	4
CHAPTER 2. CERTAINTY CAN NEVER BE BLIND	5
CHAPTER 3. THE TWO PRINCIPLES OF CERTAINTY	8
CHAPTER 4. THE ORDER BETWEEN THE INTRINSIC AND THE EXTRINSIC PRINCIPLE OF CERTAINTY	11
CHAPTER 5. HOW WE SEE TRUTH	12
CHAPTER 6. THE PRINCIPLE OF KNOWLEDGE MUST ALSO BE THE PRINCIPLE OF CERTAINTY	14
CHAPTER 7. THERE IS A SINGLE PRINCIPLE OF CERTAINTY FOR ALL POSSIBLE PROPOSITIONS	16
CHAPTER 8. A VERY SIMPLE WAY OF REFUTING SCEPTICISM	17

PART TWO APPLICATION OF THE CRITERION TO DEMONSTRATE THE TRUTH OF PURE KNOWLEDGE

CHAPTER 1. THE INTUITION OF BEING, THE SOURCE OF ALL CERTAINTY, IS SHOWN TO BE JUSTIFIED PER SE
Article 1. Sceptical objections to the intuition of being	22
Article 2. The source of the objections	23

Article 3. The first doubt: 'Could not the thought of existence in general itself be an illusion?'
§1. Reply	26
§2. The sceptic continues to press his point	27
§3. Corollaries of this teaching	30
Article 4. The second sceptical doubt: 'How can we perceive something different from ourselves?'
§1. Reply	31
§2. Continuation. — Further clarification of the notion of object	32
§3. Important corollaries	33
Article 5. The third sceptical doubt: 'Perhaps the spirit communicates its own forms to what it sees, altering and transforming things from what they are?'	35
§1. Reply	35
§2. Corollaries	37
Article 6. The confutation of the sceptics is re-affirmed	39
Article 7. The argument developed so far is contained in the teaching of Christian tradition	43
CHAPTER 2. TRUTH, OR THE IDEA OF BEING, AS THE MEANS OF KNOWING ALL OTHER THINGS
Article 1. The connection between what has been said and what follows	55
Article 2. Different uses of the word 'truth'
§1. The most general meaning of 'truth'	57
§2. The distinction between truth and true things	57
§3. Meanings of the expression 'truth of things'	57
§4. Truth properly speaking means an idea	58
§5. The meaning of the word 'truth' when we say that there are many truths	60
§6. The meaning of truth when used in the singular and absolutely	61
Article 3. Extracts from the author of the Itinerary and from St. Thomas to show that the idea of being is truth	63
Article 4. Another demonstration that the idea of being is truth
§1. Different ways of speaking give rise to many kinds of scepticism	65
§2. Apparent forms of scepticism	66
§3. Suitably expressed, scepticism can have only one form	66
§4. What is required for the scepticism of doubt to be coherent	69
§5. Scepticism is the impossibility of thought	71
§6. The idea of being, and the truth according to which we judge things, are the same	71

CHAPTER 3. THE POSSIBLE APPLICATION OF THE IDEA OF BEING
Article 1. The application of the idea of being generates the first four principles of reasoning	72
Article 2. The general principle of the application of the idea of being considered in its objective value relative to things outside the mind	73
CHAPTER 4. PERSUASION RELATIVE TO THE IDEA OF BEING OR TRUTH, AND TO THE PRINCIPLES OF REASONING
Article 1. Every human being has a necessary persuasion about truth and about the first principles of reasoning	76
Article 2. The first principles of reasoning are also called common conceptions	77
Article 3. The nature of common sense	77
Article 4. An objection against the universal persuasion of first principles	79
Article 5. Reply: the distinction between direct and reflective knowledge	79
Article 6. The danger of believing those who assert that they are not persuaded of first principles	81
Article 7. The first means for rectifying the reflective knowledge of those who deny first principles is to show that they are in contradiction with their own direct knowledge	82
Article 8. The second means for rectifying the reflective knowledge of those who deny first principles, or fail to reason correctly about the most obvious things, is the authority of others, which could therefore be called a criterion of reflective knowledge	83

PART THREE
APPLICATION OF THE CRITERION
TO DEMONSTRATE THE TRUTH
OF NON-PURE, OR MATERIATED
KNOWLEDGE

CHAPTER 1. THE FACT IN GENERAL
Article 1. The connection with what has been said	85
Article 2. The fact in itself, neither felt nor understood	90
Article 3. The felt but not understood fact	91
Article 4. How the matter of knowledge is shown to our spirit	91

Article 5. The universal principle governing every application of the form of reason to facts presented by feeling	93
Article 6. Explanation of the universal principle stated above	93
Article 7. An objection resolved	95
CHAPTER 2. A FURTHER EXPLANATION OF THE PRINCIPLE JUSTIFYING MATERIATED KNOWLEDGE IN GENERAL. THE FORMAL PART	97
Article 1. The nature of the imperfect state of innate being in the human mind	97
Article 2. Likeness	100
Article 3. The refutation of the fundamental error of the German school is strengthened ( NS , 331 ss.)	104
CHAPTER 3. THE CERTAINTY OF PERCEPTION, ESPECIALLY OF THE PERCEPTION OF OURSELVES
Article 1. What we perceive	107
Article 2. The feeling of 'myself' is a substantial feeling	107
Article 3. We perceive ourselves without an intermediary principle	108
Article 4. The certainty of the perception of 'MYSELF'	109
Article 5. St. Augustine uses the certainty of the perception of ourselves to refute the Academicians	109
Article 6. Other truths that share in the certainty of the perception of 'myself'	110
Article 7. An observation on the intellectual perceptions of feelings	112
CHAPTER 4. THE CERTAINTY OF THE PERCEPTION OF BODIES
Article 1. The difficulty of demonstrating the certainty of the perception of bodies	113
Article 2. Our understanding sees an action in the experiences undergone by our sense	114
Article 3. The human spirit perceives and knows a corporeal substance through the experience undergone by the feeling	115
Article 4. Justification of the perception of bodies	116
CHAPTER 5. THE CERTAINTY OF BEINGS WHICH ARE NOT PERCEIVED BUT DEDUCED FROM BEINGS WHICH ARE PERCEIVED
Article 1. The kind of beings we know by reasoning but not by perception	118
Article 2. The distinction between the idea of and the judgment on the subsistence of these beings	118
Article 3. The origin of the conception of these beings	119

Article 4. Judgment on the existence of God	119
CHAPTER 6. OUR KNOWLEDGE OF ESSENCES
Article 1. The sense in which we are said to know the essences of things	120
Article 2. Why modern philosophers have denied the knowledge of essences	122
Article 3. The truth of essences which are known in general	123
Article 4. Limits of our natural knowledge of essences	124
Article 5. The subjective and the objective part in the knowledge of essences	127
Article 6. Consequences of the nature of our knowledge of essences	130
Article 7. The imperfection of objective intuition	131
Article 8. Positive and negative essences	132
Article 9. The negative idea of God	134
Article 10. Conclusion	138

PART FOUR
 THE ERRORS TO WHICH
 HUMAN KNOWLEDGE IS SUBJECT

CHAPTER 1. A SUMMARY OF ALL THE COGNITIONS IN WHICH NATURE ITSELF PROTECTS US FROM EVERY ERROR	139
CHAPTER 2. THE NATURE OF HUMAN ERRORS
Article 1. The distinction between investigating the nature of error and investigating the nature of its cause	141
Article 2. Error is solely in the understanding	142
Article 3. Error is in judgments posterior to perceptions	143
Article 4. Explanation of the particular kind of errors caused by the misuse of language	144
Article 5. Why error is only in judgments posterior to perceptions and first ideas	146
Article 6. Direct knowledge and reflective knowledge — continuation	147
Article 7. Popular knowledge and philosophical knowledge	150
Article 8. A summary of what has been said about the seat of error	157
CHAPTER 3. THE CAUSE OF HUMAN ERRORS
Article 1. Error is willed	160

Article 2. Malebranche's splendid teaching about the cause of error	161
Article 3. Occasional causes of error	167
Article 4. Why it seems that we are necessitated when giving our assent to some truths, such as geometric truths, that are furnished with evidence leading to certainty	173
Article 5. Human beings are absolved of many errors	174
Article 6. Although we cannot always avoid material error, we can avoid the harm springing from it	178
Article 7. The limits within which material error can occur	179
Article 8. The sense in which the Scriptures and the Fathers of the Church say that truths are obvious, and that everyone who wishes can come to possess them	182
Article 9. St. Augustine's teaching on idolatry indicates an example of error in common, popular knowledge	186
Article 10. St. Augustine's teaching on disbelief indicates an example of error in philosophical knowledge	189
Article 11. Continuation of the analysis of error: error presupposes mental confusion	190
Article 12. Error results from an unjust suspension of assent	192
Article 13. Error sometimes results from haste or undue alacrity in giving assent	194
CHAPTER 4. REFLECTIVE PERSUASION OF TRUTH AND ERROR	197
Article 1. Reflective persuasion in general	197
Article 2. Evidence, and the persuasion produced by the first criterion of certainty in the principles	198
Article 3. Persuasion produced by the criterion of certainty found in consequences	199
Article 4. The state of the mind when persuaded by the first criterion of certainty, according to St. Thomas and the author of the Itinerary	201
Article 5. Persuasion produced by the extrinsic criterion of certainty, and especially by authority	203
Article 6. Persuasion of the first principles, deduced from an extrinsic criterion	204
Article 7. Persuasion about error is possible: the nature of this persuasion	206
Article 8. Continuation	209
Article 9. Error is always a kind of ignorance	209

CONCLUSION

CHAPTER 1. THE TEACHINGS WE HAVE DEVELOPED ARE ILLUSTRATED BY ST. AUGUSTINE'S ANALYSIS OF THE MATERIALISTS' ERROR	211
CHAPTER 2. EPILOGUE ON THE CRITERION OF TRUTH	216

THE FORCES PRESENT IN A PRIORI REASONING

CHAPTER 1. WHAT WE MEAN BY A PRIORI REASONING	220
CHAPTER 2. THE STARTING POINT OF HUMAN KNOWLEDGE ACCORDING TO SOME THINKERS OF THE GERMAN SCHOOL
Article 1. The purpose of this chapter	222
Article 2. The principal difference between our unique form and the forms assigned by some modern thinkers to the intelligent spirit	223
Article 3. The starting point of Kant's philosophy	224
Article 4. The starting point of Fichte's philosophy	228
Article 5. Schelling's starting point	235
Article 6. Bouterweck's starting point	248
Article 7. Bardilli's starting point	251
CHAPTER 3. THE STARTING POINT OF VICTOR COUSIN'S PHILOSOPHY
Article 1. The system expounded	262
Article 2. It is impossible to begin from Cousin's threefold perception
§1. It is not necessary that the absolute, infinite cause be perceived in the first perception	268
§2. It is not necessary for us to perceive ourselves intellectually when we perceive the world	270
§3. The first, essential intellection from which every reasoning moves forward is that of being in general	272
CHAPTER 4. PURE A PRIORI REASONING DOES NOT LEAD US TO KNOW ANYTHING IN THE ORDER OF SUBSISTENT, FINITE BEINGS	273
CHAPTER 5. A PRIORI REASONING LEADS US TO LOGICAL PRINCIPLES THAT APPERTAIN TO THE ORDER OF IDEAL BEINGS	278

Article 1. Definitions	278
Article 2. The extension of pure a priori knowledge	278
Article 3. The extension of a priori knowledge	279
CHAPTER 6. THE UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE OF THE WHOLE OF THIS WORK IS CONFIRMED BY A NEW ARGUMENT: THE IDEA OF BEING IS OF SUCH A NATURE THAT HUMAN BEINGS CANNOT FORM IT FOR THEMSELVES BY ABSTRACTION	281
CHAPTER 7. PURE A PRIORI REASONING LEADS TO KNOWLEDGE OF THE EXISTENCE OF SOMETHING INFINITE, GOD
Article 1. How to reason without the use of any datum outside the idea of being	283
Article 2. Hints about an a priori demonstration of the existence of God	284
 THE FIRST DIVISION OF THE BRANCHES OF KNOWLEDGE
CHAPTER 1. THE NATURE OF THE FIRST DIVISION OF THE BRANCHES OF KNOWLEDGE	289
CHAPTER 2. ON THE TWO WAYS: OBSERVATION AND REASONING	291
CHAPTER 3. THE STARTING POINT OF THE SYSTEM OF HUMAN KNOWLEDGE	292
CHAPTER 4. IS OUR STARTING POINT A PARTICULAR OR A UNIVERSAL?	295
CHAPTER 5. MUST THE STARTING POINT BE A FACT, AND IN PARTICULAR A FACT OF CONSCIOUSNESS?	296
CHAPTER 6. DOUBT AND METHODICAL INTELLIGENCE	297
