INTRODUCTION

1. Analysis and Speculative Philosophy	1
2. First examples of analysis	3
2.1. History	4
2.2. Science	5
2.3. Mental facts	10
2.4. Material facts	18
3. Analytic vocabulary	20
3.1. Components and constituents	20
3.2. Universals and particulars	25
3.3. Generic and specific	29
3.4. Facts and events	31
4. The relations of matter and mind	33

PART I

BODY AND MIND

CHAP.

I.	The Analytic Problem about Ownership	page 37
II.	Distinction between Mental and Nervous Events	40
	1. Sensations and decisions	41
	2. The nervous system	42
	3. Nervous events	47
	4. Confusion of sensation with stimulation	52
III.	Denial of Mental Events—Materialism .	53
	1. Simple materialism	53
	2. Analytic materialism	56
IV.	Correlations between Bodily and Mental Events	59
	1. Correlation of development	60
	2. Localization of function	60
	3. Correlation with disposition	62
	4. Correlation of state with state—stimulation with sensation, decision with movement	62

CONTENTS

CHAP.

V.	Do Bodily Events Occasion Mental Events and Vice Versa?	page 65
1.	The three questions	65
2.	Question I. Causal connexion	65
3.	Question II. Occasioning	66
3.1.	Meaning of 'occasion'	66
3.2.	Arguments for occasioning	67
3.2.1.	of mental events by bodily events	67
3.2.2.	of bodily events by mental events	70
3.3.	Arguments against occasioning of mental events by bodily events and vice versa	77
VI.	Do Bodily Events Produce Mental Events?	83
1.	Meaning of 'production'	83
2.	Do material events produce mental events and vice versa?	85
2.1.	Empirical arguments	85
2.2.	Philosophical arguments—Stout's argument from the analysis of ex- planation	85
I.	The principle of continuity	91
II.	The principles of resemblance be- tween cause and effect	93
3.	Stout's argument against occasioning of mental events by bodily events and vice versa and his account of the connexion	96
4.	Summary	102

VII.	Ownership	103
	1. Interactionism	103
	2. Parallelism	104
	3. Epiphenomenalism	105
	4. The double-aspect theory	105
	5. Stout's theory	106
	6. Conclusion	108
VIII.	Freewill	110
	1. Freewill and causation	110
	2. Blame entails freewill	114
	3. In what sense?	115
	4. Compatibility of ultimate self-direction with the law of causation	118
	4.1. Determination by disposition	119
	4.2. The finite series of internal determinations	122
	4.3. The infinite series of internal determinations	123
	4.4. The series of internal determinations must be either infinite or world-long	123
	4.5. Independent support of this conclusion	123
	5. Freedom of indeterminism	126
	The self-regarding sentiment	128
	Unconscious motives	129

CHAP.

IX.	Perception	page 135
1.	Normal perception	135
2.	The problem	136
3.	The conditions of correct analysis of perception	138
4.	The constituents of perception	139
4.1.	The observed side of the object	140
4.2.	Sense-qualities	141
4.3.	Sense-data	142
4.4.	The corresponding sense-datum	143
5.	The relations between the constituents of perception	144
5.1.	I. What is the relation of the corresponding sense-datum to the penny?	144
5.2.	II. What is the analysis of the relation between (1) the corresponding sense-datum, (2) its sense-qualities and (3) the observer?	144

CONTENTS

CHAP.

5.3.	Either (α) usually the corresponding sense-datum is not the surface or (β) usually its qualities are subjective	page 149
5.4.	Always either (α) the corresponding sense-datum is not the surface or (β) its qualities are subjective? Dawes Hicks' suggestion	154
X.	Knowledge of Material Things	164
1.	Meaning of 'the internal nature of material things'	165
2.	Several theories of their internal nature	167
2.1.	The phenomenalist	167
2.2.	The agnostic	167
2.3.	The mentalist	168
2.4.	The pure spatialist	168
2.5.	The moderate materialist	168
3.	Defence of moderate materialism	168
3.1.	Meaning of 'external source'	168
3.2.	Negative objection to phenomenalism and agnosticism	170
3.3.	Knowledge that an external source exists	170
3.4.	Knowledge of the internal nature of the external source	172
4.	Conclusion	181
5.	Summary of the last two chapters	182
