

Contents

PART I. MANAGEMENT'S JOB

- 1. The job of managing 3

The job of internal management. The manager's resources. Knowledge, skills, and attitudes the supervisor needs. The tools of management. Planning. Organizing. Directing. Coordinating. Controlling. Decision making. Problem-solving techniques. The seven-step problem-solving technique. Summary. Case studies, 27.
- 2. Organizations and organization structure 38

Development of the structure—the traditional viewpoint. The bases upon which organizations are built. Line and staff in organization. The tall organization. The flat organization. Decentralizing authority and responsibility. Rule of the exception. Some recent developments in organization theory. Summary. Case studies, 56.
- 3. Policies and procedures 68

Formulating and establishing policies. An example of policy implementation. Characteristics of a good policy. The supervisor interprets and applies policies. Departmental policies. Transforming policy into action. The purpose of procedures. Why supervisors should be interested in procedures. How procedures should be developed. Why procedures should be kept simple. Procedures depend on people. Application of the seven-step problem-solving technique to the redesign of a simple procedure. Summary. Case studies, 89.
- 4. Organization dynamics 100

Authority and responsibility. Delegation of authority. Learning to delegate. Barriers to delegation. Span of supervision. Extending the span of supervision. Managerial attitude. Unity of command. Violations of the chain of command. The supervisor's view of the short circuit. Analyzing violations of the chain of command. Preserving the chain of command. Flexibility in the chain of command. Summary. Case studies, 119.

5. Communicating more effectively 131

The supervisor's area of communicating. Communicating is an art. Words are tricky. Learning to listen. Distractions muddle orders. Putting across a new idea. Difficulties in discussion. Unfavorable attitudes build up listener resistance. Good attitudes facilitate understanding. How to give orders. Getting orders from the boss. Keeping the boss informed. Lack of understanding between subordinate and boss. How bosses can promote more effective communicating. The flow of management information. Communication systems. Summary. Case studies, 150.

6. Teamwork in management 161

Individuals and organizations. Sources of organizational conflict. Improving cooperation between line and staff. Expansion of staff. The service activity of staff. The advising activity of staff. The control activity of staff. Working with the industrial engineer. The first-level supervisor as a member of management. Superior-subordinate cooperation. Cooperating with fellow supervisors. Teamwork, conformity and conflict. Summary. Case studies, 180. Suggested readings for Part I, 191.

PART II. JOB MANAGEMENT7. Planning and controlling the department's work 199

Top management's role in planning. The supervisor's responsibility in planning. Lack of time and what one company did about it. The design of the supervisor's job. Personal planning. Time utilization. Delegating to subordinates. The need for total planning. Evidence of poor planning. Why planning seems difficult. The planning formula. Types of plans. The obstacles to planning. The control function. Quantitative techniques for control. Summary. Case studies, 228.

8. Improving methods 238

Methods improvement defined. Improving methods is part of the supervisor's job. Opposition to methods improvement. A systematic approach to methods improvement. The seven-step technique applied to a methods improvement problem. Step 1. Select a process or procedure to be improved. Step 2. Describe the present method. Step 3. Analyze the present method. Step 4. Develop several improved methods. Step 5. Select the most practical improved method. Step 6. Try out and install the new method. Step 7. Follow up the improved method. Illustration of applying the seven-step technique to a methods improvement problem. Illustration of an operation study. Technique for studying an operation. Procedure for making an operation study. Human engineering. Methods improvement by employees—JMT. Cost reduction. Summary. Case studies, 286.

9. Developing standards of work performance 296

The fair day's work. Standards and the time study department. The work measurement program. Introducing and implementing a work measurement program. Standards and the supervisor. Laying the groundwork for standards. Gathering information for standards. Determining the quantity or the "how much." Determining the quality or the "how well." Introducing standards of work performance. Checking performance against standards. Getting results from standards of work performance. Standards of managerial performance. Cost control. Cost control in a continuous process industry. Summary. Case studies, 333.

10. Fitting men and jobs 342

How jobs develop. Specialization and simplification. Job enlargement. Job enlargement and cost reduction. Redesigning a job. Guides for job design. The supervisor's responsibilities in placement. Matching men and jobs. The interview. The trial work period. Monotony and boredom. Misfits. Summary. Case studies, 371. Suggested readings for Part II, 383.

PART III. DEVELOPING THE WORK TEAM

11. Human relations 389

Early developments. The scientific management movement. Research in human relations. What kind of human relations? Too much human relations? Summary. Case studies, 407.

12. Training and orientation 417

What is training? Induction and orientation. The new employee and the personnel department. The new employee and the supervisor. The new employee and the group. The induction procedure. The young adult's first job. On-the-job training. Choosing a trainer. Uncovering training needs. Principles of learning and techniques of training. The four-step method of job training. Summary. Case studies, 444.

13. Organizational development and manpower planning 459

Organizational growth and development. Manpower planning. Performance appraisal. Appraisal is systematic rather than haphazard. Difficulties in rating. Some common types of rating errors. Suiting the plan to the purpose. The appraisal interview as a means of improving performance on the job. Rating the probationary employee. Interview problems. Promotions and the people who want them. Advantages and disadvantages of promoting from within. Evaluating and developing supervisors. Career planning. The fast-track manager. Internal mobility. Remedial transfers. Transfers for training purposes. Transfers necessitated by changes. Transfers and seniority. Transfer policy. The environment for career development. Summary. Case studies, 493. Suggested readings for Part III, 512.

PART IV. MAINTAINING THE WORK TEAM

14. Supervisory leadership 519

Attitudes and motivation. Leadership. Styles of leadership. How to choose a leadership pattern. Effective leadership within the limitations. The boss as a limiting factor. The setup of the organization as a limiting factor. Fellow supervisors as a limiting factor. The union as a limiting factor. The work group as a limiting factor. The job as a motivating factor. The newly promoted supervisor. The college-trained supervisor. Coaching the new supervisor. Successful leadership on the job—an application. Summary. Case Studies, 545.

15. Managing employee problems and change 557

Policies and the supervisor. Disciplinary policy. Rules. Penalties. The effects of the union contract on rule enforcement. Due process and procedure. Incompetence and negligence. Gripes and grievances. The grievance machinery. Foreman and shop steward. Grievance handling by foremen. The handling of gripes. The emotional content of gripes. Absenteeism and tardiness. Effects of tardiness and absenteeism. Finding and treating the causes. Problems with alcoholics. Techniques for reducing absences and tardiness. Counseling the absentee. Penalties for absences. Preventing disciplinary problems. Talking with offenders. Discharge. Managing change. Resistance to change. Summary. Case studies, 598.

16. Motivation and morale 620

Individual needs. Motivation problems. Personal problems of employees. Tensions on the job. What people want from their jobs. Motivation and morale. Determinants of morale. Morale and productivity. Today's employee. The job as a factor in promoting high morale. Teammates as a factor in promoting high morale. The supervisor as a factor in promoting high morale. The company as a factor in promoting high morale. Communication as a factor in promoting high morale. Summary. Case studies, 648. Suggested readings for Part IV, 664.

