TRANSLATOR'S FOREWORD xi

Introduction

The Internal Connection between Ground-Being-Inception	1
§1. Elucidation of the title of the lecture "Basic Concepts"	1
a) Basic concepts are ground -concepts	1
b) The claim of the ground-concepts	3
c) The difference of claims upon man	3
a) The claim of requirements: Needing	3
β) The claim upon the essence of historical man	4
d) Readiness for the originary, the incipient, and the "knowing better" of historiological consciousness	5
e) The meaning of reflection upon the inception of history	6
f) The goal of the lecture: Reflection as preparation for confronting the inception of our history	8
RECAPITULATION
1. Our understanding of "basic concepts" and our relation to them as an anticipatory knowing	9
2. The decay of knowing in the present age: The decision in favor of the useful over what we can do without	11
3. The inception as a decision about what is essential in Western history (in modern times: unconditional will and technology)	12
4. Practicing the relation to what is "thought-worthy" by considering the ground	15

5. The essential admittance of historical man into the inception, into the "essence" of ground 16

PART ONE

Considering the Saying

The Difference between Beings and Being

First Division

Discussion of the "Is," of Beings as a Whole 21

- §2. Beings as a whole are actual, possible, necessary 21
- §3. Nonconsideration of the essential distinction between being and beings 22
- §4. The nondiscoverability of the "is" 24
- §5. The unquestioned character of the "is" in its grammatical determination—emptiness and richness of meaning 25
- a) The emptiness and indeterminacy of the "is" as a presupposition for its being a "copula" 29
- b) Being ("is") as the general, the universal 30
- §6. The solution of healthy common sense: Acting and effecting among beings instead of empty thinking about being (workers and soldiers) 31
- §7. Renouncing being—dealing with beings 34

RECAPITULATION

1. Consideration of beings as a whole presupposes the essential inclusion of man in the difference between being and beings 36
2. Wealth and poverty of meaning in the "is" 38
3. Equating dealing with the actual with considering beings as a whole 39
4. The unthought residence of man in the distinction between being and beings 40

Second Division

Guidewords for Reflection upon Being 42

- §8. Being is the emptiest and at the same time a surplus 42
- §9. Being is the most common and at the same time unique 43
10. Being is the most intelligible and at the same time concealment 47
11. Being is the most worn-out and at the same time the origin 51
12. Being is the most reliable and at the same time the non-ground 52
13. Being is the most said and at the same time a keeping silent 53
14. Being is the most forgotten and at the same time remembrance 54
15. Being is the most constraining and at the same time liberation 56
16. Unifying reflection upon being in the sequence of guidewords 57

RECAPITULATION

Guidewords about Being

1. Being is empty as an abstract concept and at the same time a surplus 58
2. Being is the most common of all and at the same time uniqueness (The sameness of being and nothing) 59
3. The meaning of the guidewords: Instructions for reflection upon the difference between being and beings 64

Third Division

Being and Man 66

17. The ambivalence of being and the essence of man: What casts itself toward us and is cast away 66
18. The historicity of being and the historically essential abode of man 71

- §19. Remembrance into the first inception of Western thinking is reflection upon being, is grasping the ground 72

RECAPITULATION

1. The discordant essence in the relation of man to being: The casting-toward and casting-away of being 74
2. Remembrance into the first inception is placement into still presencing being, is grasping it as the ground 78

PART TWO

The Incipient Saying of Being in the Fragment of Anaximander

- §20. The conflicting intentions of philological tradition and philosophical translation 81

- §21. Nietzsche's and Diels's renderings of the fragment as the standard for interpretations current today 83

RECAPITULATION

The remembering return into the inception of Western thinking—listening to the fragment of Anaximander 87

- §22. Reflection upon the incipient saying of being in the fragment of Anaximander 88

- a) Suppositions regarding the relation between the two sentences 88
- b) The saying about being occurs in correspondences: The first sentence thinks being as τὸ χρεῶν in correspondence with the inception as threefold enjoiment 89

- §23. Excursus: Insight into the τὸ χρεῶν with the help of another word from Anaximander 92

- a) The threefold unity of enjoiment (ἀρχή) 92
- b) Enjoiment (ἀρχή) is repelling (ἄπειρον) 94

c) The governance of being as ἀρχή and ἄπειρον in γένεσις and φθορά for the presencing of beings	97
d) How does being, which is ἀρχή and ἄπειρον, let beings be?	99
§24. The second sentence thinks being in correspondence with its essence as presencing, abiding, time	101
a) Being is overcoming the unfit	101
b) The connection between being and time	103
§25. The relation of both sentences to one another: The fragment as the incipient saying of being	104
