

Table of Contents

PREFACE	v
I. INTRODUCTION
1. What is the philosophy of human nature?	1
2. A question can have many meanings	1
3. Knowledge or knowledges?	2
4. Experimental psychology and the philosophical study of man	4
5. The philosophy of human nature and metaphysics .	6
6. Organization and method	8
7. Readings	11
II. THE UNITY OF MAN
8. Preliminary: the notion of unity	12
9. Criteria and conditions of unity	15
10. The question: Is a living thing one or many beings?	18
11. The evidence for unity: A. From the outside: the finality of human activities	19
12-15. The counter-evidence for plurality	21
16. The evidence for unity: B. From the inside: direct experience and reflection	33
17. Definitions	34
18. Proofs	36
19. Readings	37
III. VEGETATIVE LIFE—THE SOUL
20. Preliminary	39
21. Generic description of vegetative life	39
22. Irritability and adaptation	41
23. Organization	42
24. These traits are characteristic only of living things .	44
25. Summary and restatement	46
26. Immanent action	47

27. Soul	50
28. Definitions	54
29. Proofs	56
30. Excursus: Are there purely vegetative beings?	57
31. Readings	58
IV KNOWLEDGE
32. A preview of the chapter	59
33. The method: reflection, distinction, analysis	61
34. The distinction between knowledge and appetency	62
35. The experience of knowledge	63
36. The nature of a knowing subject	65
37. The knowing subject is in some sense immaterial	66
38. Intentionality	68
39. Human knowing is an immanent operation	70
40. The difference between intentional change and natural change	72
41. The prerequisite for intentional activity: the species	74
42. Knowledge is not itself a change	76
43. Objectivity in knowledge	77
44. Knowledge is self-possession as well as possession of the other	78
45. Kinds of knowledge: perceptual and non-perceptual	79
46. Knowledge cannot strictly be defined	82
47. Definitions	83
48. Proofs	84
49. Readings	85
V. DIFFERENCES IN ACTIVITY AND THE THEORY OF POWERS
50. The problem	86
51. Activity is specified by its object	88
52. Material and formal object	92
53. Application to the present problem	93
54. The distinction between power and substance	93
55. Living things and their powers	97
56. Activity, power, and substance	98
57. Generic classification of human powers	99
58. Definitions	100

TABLE OF CONTENTS

ix

59. Proofs	101
60. Readings	102

VI. EXTERNAL SENSATION

61. Sensation	103
62. The external senses	104
63. The basic sense of an animal	110
64. The proper sensible object	111
65. Common and incidental sensible objects	112
66. Are the senses active or passive powers?	113
67. The sensible species	114
68. The immateriality of sensation	115
69. The subject of sensation	116
70. "The sensible object in act is the sense in act"	118
71. Definitions	120
72. Proofs	121
73. Readings	121

VII. INTERNAL SENSATION

74. Perception and sense-perception	123
75. Sensory awareness and the unifying sense	124
76. Imagination	128
77. Instinctive activities and the estimative power	134
78. The memorative power	139
79. Memory as recognition	140
80. Human instinctive activity; the discursive estimative and reminiscence	142
81. Attention. The "unconscious"	145
82. Reconstruction of sense perception	147
83. Definitions	150
84. Proofs	151
85. Excursus: the nature of brute sensibility	151
86. Readings	155

VIII. THE INTELLECT

87. The choice of a point of departure	158
88. The analysis of language	159
89. Confirmatory proofs for the existence and nature of the intellect	161

90. The object of the intellect (I)	164
91. The process of knowledge (Origin of ideas)	167
92. The acts of the intellect	173
93. The various material objects of the intellect	180
94. The formal object of the human intellect (II)	188
95. Intellectual memory	189
96. Relation between the intellect and phantasm in the use of knowledge	191
97. Practical knowledge	195
98. The mental word	197
99. Definitions	199
100. Proofs	200
101. Readings	203
IX. APPETENCY AND APPETITE
102. The fact of conscious tendencies and attitudes	205
103. Appetency is properly called passion	207
104. Passions and the bodily resonance	208
105. The basic passions: love and hate	211
106. The remaining principal passions: hope and fear	213
107. An outline view of the simple passions	213
108. The philosophy of love	216
109. The levels of tendency	220
110. The two kinds (genera) of conscious appetite	222
111. Definitions	224
112. Proofs	225
113. Readings	226
X. THE WILL
114. The fact of rational appetency and appetite	227
115. The nature of will	228
116. Some preliminary distinctions	231
117. The will and extrinsic necessary	234
118. The will-to-end	235
119. Intention	239
120. Deliberation	240
121. The acceptance of a unique means	240
122. Consent as a terminal act	241
123. The act of choice	242

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xi

124. Complex processes of willing	245
125. The imperium and the commanded act	248
126. Diagrams of the will acts	249
127. The will and the other powers	251
128. Definitions	254
129. Proofs	256
130. Readings	258

XI. THE SENSORY APPETITES

131. The fact of the sensory appetite	260
132. The two kinds of sensory (animal) appetite	261
133. The organ of the sensory appetites	262
134. How the sensory appetite is put into act	263
135. The classification of the sensory passions	266
136. Classification of the passions and classification of emotions, desires, and feelings	269
137. Definitions	270
138. Proof	271
139. Readings	271

XII. HABITS

140. Introduction	272
141. Habits of motor activity	273
142. Habits of the senses	276
143. Habits of the sensory appetites	277
144. Habits of the will	278
145. "Virtual intention"	279
146. Habits of the intellect	281
147. The nature of habit	284
148. Distinction of habits	287
149. Habit-groups	288
150. The inter-relationships of habits	289
151. The necessity of habits	290
152. The acquiring and growth of habits	292
153. Can animals have habits?	294
154. Definitions	295
155. Proofs	296
156. Readings	297

XIII. THE HUMAN SOUL

157. The unity of man	298
158. The definition of man	302
159. Does man have a soul?	302
160. The nature of the human soul: I. substantiality	304
161. What kind of a cause is the soul?	306
162. The nature of the human soul: II. spirituality	307
163. The presence of the soul in the body	309
164. The presence of intellect and will in the body	310
165. The origin of the soul	311
166. The immortality of the human soul	312
167. The final cause of the soul	316
168. The soul's knowledge after death	317
169. Definitions	318
170. Proofs	319
171. Readings	321

XIV. HUMAN NATURE: A SYSTEMATIC SUMMARY

172. The purpose of this summary	322
173. Intellectual substance: its place and function in the universe	323
174. The activity proper to intellectual substance	326
175. The human intellect and the need for senses	330
176. The human soul and its body	336
177. The sensory life of man	338
178. Knowledge and appetency	341
179. The sensory appetite	342
180. The rational appetite; freedom	343
181. The will and the other powers	348
182. The origin of the soul	349
183. The immortality of the soul	351
184. Man—individual and society	352
185. Readings	354

APPENDICES

Part I: Philosophical Systems	357
A Dualism: The Platonic Man	358
B Idealistic Monism: The Spirit-man	361

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xiii

C	Materialistic Monism: The Mechanical Man	364
D	Positivism: The Unsubstantial Man	368
E	Sensism: The Animal-man	372
F	Philosophical Freudianism: The Instinctive Man	375
G	Philosophical Evolutionism: The Evolving Animal	378
H	Determinism: The Pre-determined Man	381
Part II: Related Issues
K	What Is the Philosophy of Human Nature?	385
L	Efficient Causality in Material Things	402
M	Some Corollaries about the Soul as Form	408
N	Philosophy and the Scientific Theory of Evolution	412
O	Truth and Error in the Senses	428
P	The Measurement of Intelligence	432
Q	Freedom, Hypnosis, and Post-hypnotic Suggestion	434
INDEX	437