

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION	3
APOLOGY	29
CRITO	61
PHAEDO	81
SYMPOSIUM	155
REPUBLIC	217
BOOK I: What is justice? Is the just life happier than the unjust?	221
BOOK II: The life of a well-ordered state and education of its soldier citizens in music and gymnastics, and in right ideas of God.	253
BOOK III: Exclusion of the poets from the schools. Value of the right sort of music and gymnastics. Selection of the best boys and girls for training as rulers.	288
BOOK IV: The virtues of such a state—wisdom, courage, and temperance. Justice also to be found there. The same virtues appear in the life of a well-ordered individual.	306

- BOOK V: Education of women. Community of wives and children in the governing classes. Humanity in war. Rulers must be philosophers. 332
- BOOK VI: Nature of the true philosopher, "spectator of all time and all existence." Contribution of the philosopher to the state. The Idea of the Good. 368
- BOOK VII: Figure of mankind in the dark cave. Special education and training of rulers in science, philosophy, and practice of government. 398
- BOOK VIII: Four inferior types of government—timocracy, oligarchy, democracy, and tyranny. Corresponding types of individuals. How from the better they degenerate to the worse. 429
- BOOK IX: The tyrant as the most unjust and most miserable of men. The just and wise man as ruler over himself and therefore the happiest. 460
- BOOK X: Further reasons for excluding poetry from the state. The rewards of justice and wisdom in this life and the next. 477
- PRONOUNCING GLOSSARY OF NAMES 497