

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS

PART I

THE ORIGINS OF HUME'S PHILOSOPHY

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTORY: THE DISTINCTIVE PRINCIPLES AND ETHICAL ORIGINS OF HUME'S PHILOSOPHY . . . . .	PAGE 3
The Reid-Beattie Interpretation of Hume's Teaching . . . . .	3
What is truly Distinctive and Central in Hume's Teaching: his Reversal of the Rôles hitherto ascribed to Reason and to Feeling respectively . . . . .	8
That Hume, under the Influence of Hutcheson, entered into his Philosophy through the Gateway of Morals . . . . .	12
The External Evidence in regard to the Hutchesonian Origins of the Treatise . . . . .	14

CHAPTER II

HUTCHESON'S TEACHING AND ITS INFLUENCE ON HUME . . . . .	23
Hutcheson's Restatement of Locke's Distinction between Inner and Outer Sense, and his Extension of Inner Senses to include Moral and Aesthetic Senses . . . . .	24
The involuntary, disinterested Character of the Moral and Aesthetic Senses, as predetermined for us by the Frame of our Human Nature . . . . .	26
Hutcheson's consequent View of Moral and Aesthetic Judgments as Non-rational, resting exclusively on Feeling . . . . .	29
The twofold Foundation of Hutcheson's Teaching . . . . .	37
Hutcheson's Contention that all Moral and Aesthetic Judgments rest not on Reason or on reflectively considered empirical Data, but solely on Feeling, the main Influence in opening to Hume his 'new Scene of Thought' . . . . .	41
Hutcheson's Influence in leading Hume to invert the Rôles hitherto ascribed to Passion and to Reason respectively, and to apply this Point of View in the Treatment of all Judgments of Matters of Fact and Existence . . . . .	44
Influence on Hume of other Features in Hutcheson's Teaching . . . . .	47

CHAPTER III

THE INFLUENCE OF NEWTON AND OF LOCKE . . . . .	53
The Influence on Hume of Newton's Teaching in regard to Scientific Method . . . . .	53
Why Hume insists on the Importance of 'Experiment' . . . . .	58
The Meaning Hume attaches to the Term 'Experiment' . . . . .	61

xviii ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
Hume follows Locke in distinguishing between Knowledge and Opinion or Belief . . . . .	62
The Two Types of Assurance further considered . . . . .	68
Hume's Associationist Teaching modelled on the Pattern of the Newtonian Physics . . . . .	71
The Hutchesonian and Newtonian Influences in Conflict with one another . . . . .	73

PART II

PRELIMINARY SIMPLIFIED STATEMENT OF HUME'S CENTRAL DOCTRINES, TAKEN MAINLY IN THE ORDER OF THEIR EXPOSITION IN THE TREATISE AND ENQUIRIES

CHAPTER IV

CURRENT MISUNDERSTANDINGS OF HUME'S TEACHING . . . . .	79
Does Hume belong exclusively to the Locke-Berkeley Tradition? . . . . .	79
Does Hume agree with Berkeley in denying the Existence of a Material World? . . . . .	85
Does Causation in Hume's View reduce to sheer Uniformity? . . . . .	88
Does Hume deny the Existence of a Continuing Self? . . . . .	96
The Misunderstandings due to Hume's Employment of the Term 'Reason' in two very different Senses . . . . .	99

CHAPTER V

PRELIMINARY OUTLINE STATEMENT OF HUME'S TEACHING, AS EXPOUNDED IN PARTS i, iii AND iv OF BOOK I OF THE TREATISE . . . . .	105
The Scope and Materials of Experience . . . . .	105
The Uses to which Hume puts Locke's Teaching in regard to 'Sensation' and 'Reflexion' . . . . .	108
The misleading Character of Hume's Exposition in the opening Sections of the Treatise . . . . .	110
The Primacy of the Ordinary Unsophisticated Consciousness . . . . .	116
The Problem of Causal Inference . . . . .	121
The two Levels at which Belief operates . . . . .	124
The two Natural Beliefs check and counterbalance one another . . . . .	127
How Hume's Positive Teaching stands related to his Scepticism . . . . .	129

Appendix to Chapter V

HUME'S MANNER OF EMPLOYING THE TERMS 'FICTION' AND 'ILLUSION' . . . . .	133
---	-----

CHAPTER VI

PRELIMINARY OUTLINE STATEMENT OF HUME'S THEORY OF MORALS, AS EXPOUNDED IN BOOKS II AND III OF THE TREATISE . . . . .	139
The disinterested Character of the Passions; they have Pleasure and Pain as their Efficient Cause, but not as their Object . . . . .	139

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS xix

	PAGE
In Morals, as in Belief, Reason acts in the Service of Feeling and Instinct	143
The Part played by Reason in determining the Artificial Virtues	147
The Teaching of the Treatise in regard to Sympathy modified in the Enquiry concerning Morals	150
Hume's final View of the Manner in which Reason and the Moral Sentiments co-operate in determining Moral Conduct	152
The Subordination of Reason to the Passions central in Hume's General Philosophy	154

PART III

DETAILED CONSIDERATION OF THE CENTRAL DOCTRINES, TAKEN IN WHAT MAY BE PRESUMED TO HAVE BEEN THE ORDER OF THEIR FIRST DISCOVERY

CHAPTER VII

DOCTRINE OF THE PASSIONS AND OF SYMPATHY IN ITS BEARING ON HUME'S THEORY OF MORALS	159
Book I in its relation to the Teaching of Books II and III	159
Unsatisfactory Features of the Argument and Exposition in Book II	160
'Passion' not inclusive of Pleasure and Pain	162
Hume's Teaching Non-hedonistic	163
Classification of the Passions	164
Doctrine of Sympathy	169
The Moral Effects of Sympathy	174

CHAPTER VIII

THE INDIRECT PASSIONS OF PRIDE AND HUMILITY, LOVE AND HATRED; AND IN CONNEXION THEREWITH HUME'S FIRST STATEMENT AND APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF ASSOCIATION	179
The Idea of the Self an indispensable conditioning Accompaniment of Pride and Humility	179
Distinction between the 'Object' and the 'Subject' of Pride and Humility	180
The four-stage, complex Mechanisms which condition the Experiencing of Pride and Humility	181
Hume's first Formulation of the Principles of Association, and his Use of them in accounting for the four indirect Passions	183
Sympathy a supplementary Agency in the Generation of the Indirect Passions	188
The Indirect Passions, as observable in Animals	189

CHAPTER IX

THE FUNCTION OF REASON IN THE MORAL SPHERE	193
The discursive Activities of Reason play an indispensable Part in determining Moral Action	193

xx ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
Why Utility is morally approved . . . . .	196
Moral Judgments, quâ Moral, have their Source solely in the particular Fabric and Constitution of the Human Species . . . . .	197
Hume's Teaching in regard to Moral Obligation . . . . .	200
CHAPTER X
THE OPENING SECTIONS OF THE TREATISE , AS PREDETERMINED BY HUME'S EARLY DOCTRINE OF BELIEF . . . . .	205
The Relations holding between Impressions and Ideas . . . . .	205
Every Idea an Exact Replica of a Corresponding Impression . . . . .	207
A fourth main Tenet, that the Difference between Impressions and Ideas is a Difference in Force and Liveliness, and, as defining this Difference, a new and revolutionary Doctrine of Belief . . . . .	209
Why Hume feels at liberty to use naïvely realistic Language . . . . .	212
The Distinction between Impressions of Sensation and Impressions of Reflexion . . . . .	213
Ideas to be dealt with before proceeding to Impressions . . . . .	215
Why the Teaching of these opening Sections has proved misleading to Hume's Readers . . . . .	218
The Three Stages in the Argument of Book I . . . . .	219
A further Set of Reasons why the opening Sections are misleading . . . . .	223
CHAPTER XI
MEMORY . . . . .	229
By what Signs we distinguish between the Remembered and the merely Imagined . . . . .	229
The Unsatisfactoriness of Hume's Modes of Exposition . . . . .	232
How Hume's further Treatment of Belief in Part iv of Book I applies in the Case of Memory . . . . .	235
CHAPTER XII
THE ASSOCIATION OF IDEAS, AND ITS PRODUCTS . . . . .	239
The Association of Ideas may be physiologically or otherwise conditioned, but is for us an Ultimate . . . . .	239
Is Resemblance a 'natural' Relation? . . . . .	241
Is Causality, considered as a 'natural' Relation, distinguishable from Contiguity, and 'more extensive' in its Application? . . . . .	242
The Key to these and kindred Questions supplied by Hume's Treatment of Causal Association in Book II . . . . .	245
Modifications made by Hume in his successive Accounts of Causal Association in the Treatise and Enquiry . . . . .	248
Are Relations, Modes and Substances 'Products of Association'? . . . . .	250
The Distinction between Modes and Substances . . . . .	254
CHAPTER XIII
ABSTRACT IDEAS . . . . .	257
All Ideas are Images, and every Image is completely determinate . . . . .	257
How Ideas none the less function as if they were universal . . . . .	259
The main Problem is evaded, not solved . . . . .	261
Hume proceeds to allow of 'Distinctions of Reason' . . . . .	264
The presumable Reasons for Hume's confused Account of Abstraction . . . . .	267

CHAPTER XIV

HUME'S VERSION OF HUTCHESON'S TEACHING THAT SPACE AND TIME ARE NON-SENSATIONAL . . . . .	PAGE 273
Space and Time are complex Ideas which lie beyond the Nature of each and all of our simple Impressions . . . . .	273
The minima sensibilia are extensionless . . . . .	276
Why Hume regards Space and Time as non-sensational: the Influence exercised by Hutcheson . . . . .	279
Other Passages in which Hume has not held to the Principle that every Idea corresponds to some Sense-impression . . . . .	281
Why Hume regards Space and Time as non-sensational: the further, decisive Influence exercised by Bayle . . . . .	284
Hume's Treatment of Geometry as an inexact Science not dictated by his Sensationalism, but by the Need for a non-sceptical 'rational' Solution of alleged Antinomies . . . . .	288

Appendices to Chapter XIV

Appendix A. —HUME'S DISCUSSION OF THE ALLEGED POSSIBILITY OF INFINITE DIVISIBILITY AND OF A VACUUM, IN PART II OF BOOK I . . . . .	291
Appendix B. —THE PASSAGES IN BOOK I, PART IV, SECTION 5, ON SPATIAL LOCATION . . . . .	319
Appendix C. —THE INFLUENCE OF BAYLE . . . . .	325
Appendix D. —THE SECTION IN NICHOLAS DE MALEZIEU'S ELEMENS DE GEOMETRIE REFERRED TO BY HUME IN THE TREATISE , I, II, 2 (30) . . . . .	339
Appendix E. —ISAAC BARROW ON CONGRUITY AS THE STANDARD OF EQUALITY AND ON WHAT CAN BE MEANT BY A 'VACUUM' . . . . .	343

CHAPTER XV

'KNOWLEDGE' IN THE STRICT SENSE OF THE TERM . . . . .	349
The perfunctory Character of Hume's Argument in Book I, Part III, Section I . . . . .	349
The two Groups of 'philosophical' Relation . . . . .	350
The Ambiguities in Hume's Use of the Term 'Idea' . . . . .	350
Time and Place Relations do not fit into either of the two Groups . . . . .	354
Hume's Teaching really calls for a threefold Distinction, between immediate Awareness, Knowledge and Belief . . . . .	356
Hume's Treatment of Knowledge in Section I of Part IV . . . . .	357

CHAPTER XVI

BELIEF IN CAUSALITY: THE NATURE OF CAUSAL 'INFERENCE' . . . . .	365
Certainty not limited to the Sphere of Knowledge strictly so called . . . . .	365
Causality the one Relation which informs us of 'Existences and Objects' not immediately experienced . . . . .	366
The Nature of the 'Inference' thereby operated . . . . .	368
Hume does not take a merely 'Uniformity' View of Causation . . . . .	369
The Nature of causal 'Inference' must first be determined, viz. as not being Inference but as itself a causally determined Mode of Belief . . . . .	370

xxii ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Analysis of causal 'Inference': the 'Inference' rests on Custom, not on Reason . . . . .	374
How causal 'Inference', in turn, conditions Belief . . . . .	376
An Objection which Hume endeavours to meet . . . . .	378
'Experience' ultimately employed by Hume in a normative Sense: yet causal Agency, even when reflectively determined, determined only as an Object of Belief . . . . .	382
Why Reflective Thinking is required to supplement Custom . . . . .	383
The excessive Emphasis upon Custom in the early Sections due to Hume's Preoccupation with Associationist Hypotheses . . . . .	387

CHAPTER XVII

BELIEF IN CAUSALITY: THE ORIGIN OF THE IDEA OF NECESSITY . . . . .	391
The Source of the Idea of necessary Connexion . . . . .	391
Recapitulation of the Steps in Hume's Argument . . . . .	393
Misleading Features in Hume's Methods of Exposition . . . . .	396
Hume's Thesis twofold . . . . .	398
Causation therefore definable only in Terms foreign to it . . . . .	400
A main Issue not yet dealt with . . . . .	402

CHAPTER XVIII

THE CAUSAL MAXIM NEITHER SELF-EVIDENT NOR DEMONSTRABLE: ITS SANCTIONS SOLELY THOSE OF NATURAL BELIEF . . . . .	405
The Maxim not self-evident, and not demonstrable . . . . .	405
Hume is not here questioning the Truth of the Maxim . . . . .	407
The Maxim gives Expression to a 'natural' Belief . . . . .	409

Appendix to Chapter XVIII

HUME'S EXPLICIT DENIAL THAT HE HAD EVER THOUGHT OF ASSERTING THAT EVENTS ARE UNCAUSED . . . . .	411
---	-----

CHAPTER XIX

PROBABILITY OF CHANCES AND PROBABILITY OF CAUSES . . . . .	415
The Nature of 'Chance' . . . . .	415
The Probability of Chances: how a superior Number of Chances determines Belief . . . . .	418
The same Mechanism accounts for the Probability of Causes . . . . .	420
How we extract a single Judgment from a Contrariety of past Events . . . . .	424
Defects in Hume's early Teaching as shown in these Sections of the Treatise . . . . .	427

CHAPTER XX

LIBERTY AND NECESSITY . . . . .	433
Hume's strict and consistent Adherence to Necessitarian Teaching . . . . .	433
The Nature of the 'Will' . . . . .	435
The Discussion of Volition and of its conscious Fulfilment, in the Enquiry . . . . .	436

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS xxiii

Liberty of Spontaneity to be distinguished from the alleged	PAGE
Liberty of Indifference . . . . .	439
No Medium between Chance and Necessity . . . . .	441

CHAPTER XXI

THE SCEPTICAL AND THE POSITIVE ASPECTS OF HUME'S DOCTRINE OF NATURAL BELIEF . . . . .

Belief more than merely the enlivening of Ideas . . . . .	443
The Grounds on which Hume parts Company with the Sceptics	446
Hume's positive Doctrine of 'Natural Belief' . . . . .	449
The two Systems : the Vulgar and the Philosophical . . . . .	450
The Vulgar System, on being modified in one fundamental Respect, is alone tenable and self-consistent . . . . .	451
Belief, as fallible, has to be distinguished from all Modes of immediate Awareness. The distinguishing Features, and the two Forms, of 'Natural' Belief . . . . .	454

Appendix to Chapter XXI

HUME'S TEACHING IN REGARD TO THE IMAGINATION . . . . .	459
--	-----

CHAPTER XXII

BELIEF AS IT ENTERS INTO SENSE-PERCEPTION . . . . .

Belief in continuing independent Existents not due to the Senses or to Reason . . . . .	465
Belief in continuing independent Existents operates in and through the Imagination and rests on the conjoint Qualities of Constancy and Coherence . . . . .	469
Belief in continuing Existence prior to Belief in independent Existence : Identity a Fiction due to the Imagination . . . . .	473
Hume's further Exposition and Defence of his Doctrine of 'Natural Belief' . . . . .	485
The Dependence of the philosophical Tenets upon the Natural Beliefs . . . . .	487
The Conflict not between Reason and Imagination, but between contending Propensities of the Imagination, i.e. between the two Natural Beliefs . . . . .	490

CHAPTER XXIII

'IDENTITY' AND 'SUBSTANCE' IN THEIR BEARING ON THE NATURE OF THE SELF . . . . .

Why the Status of 'Substance' is different from that of 'Causality' . . . . .	497
The Bearing of Hume's View of 'Substance' on his Account of the Self : the required 'Principle of Union' exclusively causal . . . . .	499
The two main Respects in which Hume departs from traditional Teaching . . . . .	502

Appendix to Chapter XXIII

BAYLE'S ARTICLE ON SPINOZA , AND THE USE WHICH HUME HAS MADE OF IT . . . . .	506
---	-----

xxiv ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS

PART IV
THE FINAL OUTCOME

CHAPTER XXIV

	PAGE
THE RELATION OF THE TREATISE TO THE ENQUIRIES . . . . .	519
The Reception given to the Treatise . . . . .	519
Hume's own later Attitude to the Treatise . . . . .	523
Was Hume influenced by unworthy Motives? . . . . .	526
Hume's Reasons for disowning the Treatise . . . . .	530
Summary and Conclusions . . . . .	536

CHAPTER XXV

CONCLUDING COMMENTS . . . . .	543
Hume the Defender of Nature against the Assumed Claims of Reason . . . . .	543
Hume's Failure in Thoroughness of Analysis . . . . .	547
The two Conflicting Parts of Hume's Programme . . . . .	549
Hume's Confession of Failure and Reaffirmation of his Principles in the Appendix to Volume III of the Treatise . . . . .	553
Hume's Tendency to substitute psychological for logical Analysis . . . . .	560
Hume avowedly unoriginal in his Ethical Outlook . . . . .	562