

Contents

3.4	Varieties of meaning	page 82
3.4.a	Meaning and the language of social science	82
3.4.b	Meaning and the objects of social science: subjective meanings	85
3.4.c	Meaning and the objects of social science: objective meanings	95
3.4.d	Meaning and social science: conclusions	103
3.5	Two examples	107
3.5.a	Approaches in the sociology of religion and magic	107
3.5.b	The Marxist theory of the role of consciousness in the proletarian revolution	113
4	VALUES AND SOCIAL SCIENCE	118
4.1	Values	118
4.2	The empiricist analysis of values and social science	121
4.3	A holistic philosophy of social science	125
4.4	Examples of a holistic philosophy of values and social science	128
4.5	The critical force of a holistic philosophy of values and social science	132
4.6	Naturalism and a value-laden social science	137
4.6.a	Values and the metaphysics of social science	139
4.6.b	Rational and empirical constraints on a value-laden social science	147
4.7	An example: the philosophical presuppositions of Mannheim's sociology	152
4.7.a	Mannheim on society and the individual	153
4.7.b	Mannheim on thought and action	156
5	PARADIGMS AND SOCIAL SCIENCE	161
5.1	Paradigms	161
5.2	The status of social science in Kuhnian terms	163
5.3	Exclusive paradigms and social science	170
5.4	Methodological prescriptions for sociology	178
5.5	An example: Soviet sociology	180
	Conclusion	196
	References	201
	Index	211