

Contents

Preface	page xi
Acknowledgments	xiii

PART ONE: JUDGMENT

1	Toward a homuncular theory of believing	3
	I The reality of beliefs	3
	II Homuncular Functionalism	5
	III The advantages of representationalism	7
	IV Representations and homunctionalism	11
	V Objections	15
2	Psychological laws	25
	I The question of psychological laws	25
	II Davidson's anomalism	28
	III Davidson's main argument	32
	IV Anomalism and functionalism	37
	V Quine	45
	VI Adjudication	48
3	Tacit belief	54
	I Explicit belief	55
	II The problem	58
	III Extrapolator-deducers	59
	IV Having reasons	65
	V Instrumentalism versus elimination	67
4	Representation and the semantics of belief-ascription	72
	I Kripke's puzzle	72
	II Semantical content	76
	III The uses of belief, "widely" construed	79
	IV Self-regarding belief	84

PART TWO: JUSTIFICATION

5	Reliabilism	91
	I The theory	91
	II The locus of reliability	94
	III Reliability and counterfactuals	98
	IV A difficulty for externalism	109
	V Why I am not a reliabilist	110
6	Occam's Razor	112
	I The Razor	112
	II A defense of explanationism in philosophy	115
	III Against privileged premises	122
	IV Subject matter	124
	V From philosophy to reasoning of all sorts	125
7	Epistemic value	128
	I Explanationism	129
	II Explanationism and skepticism	134
	III Epistemic goodness	139
	IV Objections and replies	144
	V A final clarification	154
8	Conservatism and the data base	157
	I The virtue of conservatism	157
	II Establishing the data base	163
	III Foundations	170
	IV The remaining problem	173
	V Concluding remarks	175
9	Induction and best explanation	178
	I Enthymemes	178
	II Enumerative syllogism and statistical syllogism	182
10	Reality	189
	I "Realism"	189
	II Two other recent senses of "realism"	190
	III Back to the real world	194
	IV Skepticism and reality	195
11	Moral facts and moral knowledge	198
	I Unbelievably bad arguments against moral facts	199

II	A posteriori reductive identification	205
III	Moral knowledge	207
	References	217
	Index	231