

Contents

Charts and Figure	xi
Preface	xiii
Introduction	xvii
CHAPTER I What Is Democracy?	3
CHAPTER II Liberty and Equality: A Democratic Tension	16
1. The Meaning of "Liberty"	17
a. The Central Core	18
b. Possible Extensions	24
c. A Proposed Definition and Other Possible Extensions	28
d. Further Remarks	34
2. The Meaning of "Equality"	35
3. The Relations between Liberty and Equality Reviewed	44
CHAPTER III Individualism and Collectivism: An Additional Tension	59
1. Introductory Remarks	59
2. The Individual versus the Whole, as Starting Point for Analysis	65
a. "Dispositions" and "Reductionism"	66
b. Heuristic Devices and "Functionalism"	68
c. Wholes and Systems as Causes	70
d. Institutionalism	72
3. The Nature of Man	81
a. Autonomy and Dignity	81
b. Psychological Attributes	89
4. The Nature of the Collectivity	95
5. Implications for Democracy	103
6. Further Criticisms of Collectivism	113
7. Concluding Remarks	115
CHAPTER IV Justificatory Democratic Theory	121
1. The Development of Modern Democratic Doctrine	123
	vii

CONTENTS

a. Background	123
b. Seventeenth-Century Theories	124
c. The Utilitarians	126
d. Rousseau	127
2. Justification of Democratic Ideals: An Analytical View	130
a. Preliminary Remarks	130
b. The Case for Liberty	132
c. Collectivist Views on Liberty	139
d. The Case for Equality	143
3. Implementation of the Democratic Ideals	149
4. Democracy and the Ends of Government	154
5. Concluding Remarks	158
CHAPTER V Types of Operational Democratic Theory	161
1. Power Theories	161
2. Motivational Theories in General	165
3. Radical Individualism	170
4. Qualified Forms of Individualism	180
a. Admission of Sympathy, Low-cost Impartiality, and Nonmaterial Interests	180
b. Other Variants of Individualism	181
5. The Theory of the Public Interest	183
6. Rights and Duties (Deontological) Theories	191
7. Collectivist Democratic Theory	199
8. Comparisons and Contrasts among Motivational Theories	202
9. Concluding Remarks	203
CHAPTER VI Conditions of Democracy	206
1. Introductory Remarks	206
2. Historical and Political Factors	213
3. Socioeconomic Factors	218
4. The Political Culture	236
a. General	236
b. Dignity, Autonomy, and Respect for Persons	239
c. Belief in Individual Rights	240
d. Trust, Tolerance, and Willingness to Compromise	241
e. Literacy and Education	243
f. Commitment to Democratic Procedures and Values	244
g. Public Spirit	245
h. Nationalism	246
i. Consensus and Cleavage	247
j. Institutions	253

5. Conclusion	255
CHAPTER VII Responsiveness and Responsibility	260
1. Responsiveness	261
2. Responsibility—Meanings	266
3. Accountability, Motivational Theories, and Political Parties	268
4. Limitations of Political Parties as Agencies of Accountability	277
5. The Party-Government Model Further Considered	283
6. Rationality and Accountability	287
7. Weak-Party Systems	293
8. Responsibility as Rationality	302
9. Concluding Remarks	304
CHAPTER VIII Representation	309
1. Elective Representation—Preliminaries	311
2. "Linkage" between Representative and Represented	315
3. Theories of Representation	321
a. Delegate versus Trustee	323
b. District versus Nation	332
c. Representatives and Political Parties	335
4. Application of Motivational Theories to Theories of Representation	337
5. Review	347
6. Power Theories and Theories of Representation	350
7. Interest Representation	351
8. Proportional Representation	357
9. Concluding Remarks	360
CHAPTER IX Decision-Making Rules and Machinery: Individualistic Theories	363
1. Preliminary Remarks	363
2. Democracy, Majority Rule, and Radical Individualism	370
3. Radical Individualism and Decision-Making Rules	373
a. Preliminaries	373
b. Method of Calculation	374
c. The Case of a Law Abolishing Democracy	376
d. The Case of Rights Fundamental to Democracy	378
e. The Problem of Consensus	379
f. Ban on Arbitrary Action by Government	381
g. Local Interests	383
h. Other Types of Special Interest	390
i. The Problem of "Intensity"	394

CONTENTS

j. General Legislation	396
4. Bicameralism and the Executive Veto	400
5. Summary	407
6. Variants of Radical Individualism	408
CHAPTER X Decision-Making Rules and Machinery: Other Theories	412
1. Decision Making and the Theory of the Public Interest	412
2. Decision Making and the Rights and Duties Theory	421
3. Decision Making and Collectivist Theory	426
4. Political Parties and Rules for Decision Making	429
5. Decision-Making Rules and the Political Culture	431
6. In Conclusion: Decision-Making Rules and Types of Democratic Theory	435
CHAPTER XI Participation	438
1. The Meaning of Political Participation	438
2. Reasons for Advocating Increased Participation	441
3. Relations of the Various Types of Democratic Theory to Participation	445
a. Motivational Theories	445
b. Power Theories	449
4. The Institutionalization of Participation	452
5. Problems	456
6. The Question of Evidence	464
7. In Conclusion	468
CHAPTER XII Leadership	470
1. Definitions	471
2. Leadership and Major Governmental Types	473
3. Leadership and Power Theories of Democracy	478
4. The Nature of Leadership Further Considered	484
5. The Institutionalization of Leadership	491
6. Democratic Leadership in Modern States	493
7. Application to Particular Democratic Systems	495
8. Leadership and Certain American Political Institutions	500
9. In Conclusion	504
CHAPTER XIII Conclusion	506
Bibliography	527
Index	559