

CONTENTS

PREFACE

9

PART I

POST-KANTIAN IDEALIST SYSTEMS

One: INTRODUCTION

15

Preliminary remarks—Kant's philosophy and idealist metaphysics—The meaning of idealism, its insistence on system and its confidence in the power and scope of philosophy—The idealists and theology—The romantic movement and German idealism—The difficulty in fulfilling the idealist programme—The anthropomorphic element in German idealism—Idealist philosophies of man.

Two: FICHTE (1)

50

Life and writings—On looking for the fundamental principle of philosophy; the choice between idealism and dogmatism—The pure ego and intellectual intuition—Comments on the theory of the pure ego; phenomenology of consciousness and idealist metaphysics—The three fundamental principles of philosophy—Explanatory comments on Fichte's dialectical method—The theory of science and formal logic—The general idea of the two deductions of consciousness—

The theoretical deduction—The practical deduction—Comments on Fichte's deduction of consciousness.

Three: FICHTE (2)

81

Introductory remarks—The common moral consciousness and the science of ethics—Man's moral nature—The supreme principle of morality and the formal condition of the morality of actions—Conscience as an unerring guide—The philosophical application of the formal moral law—The idea of moral vocation and Fichte's general vision of reality—A community of selves in a world as a condition of self-consciousness—The principle or rule of right—The deduction and nature of the State—The closed commercial State—Fichte and nationalism.

Four: FICHTE (3)

100

Fichte's early ideas on religion—God in the first version of the theory of science—The charge of atheism and Fichte's reply—The infinite Will in The Vocation of Man—The development of the philosophy of Being, 1801–5—The Doctrine of Religion—Later writings—Explanatory and critical comments on Fichte's philosophy of Being.

Five: SCHELLING (1)

121

Life and writings—The successive phases in Schelling's thought—Early writings and the influence of Fichte.

- Six:* SCHELLING (2) 133
 The possibility and metaphysical grounds of a philosophy of Nature—The general outlines of Schelling's philosophy of Nature—The system of transcendental idealism—The philosophy of art—The Absolute as identity.
- Seven:* SCHELLING (3) 157
 The idea of the cosmic Fall—Personality and freedom in man and God; good and evil—The distinction between negative and positive philosophy—Mythology and revelation—General remarks on Schelling—Notes on Schelling's influence and on some kindred thinkers.
- Eight:* SCHLEIERMACHER 183
 Life and writings—The basic religious experience and its interpretation—The moral and religious life of man—Final remarks.
- Nine:* HEGEL (1) 194
 Life and writings—Early theological writings—Hegel's relations to Fichte and Schelling—The life of the Absolute and the nature of philosophy—The phenomenology of consciousness.
- Ten:* HEGEL (2) 229
 The logic of Hegel—The ontological status of the Idea or Absolute in itself and the transition to Nature—The philosophy of Nature—The Absolute as Spirit; subjective Spirit—The concept of right—Morality—The family and civil society—

The State—Explanatory comments on Hegel's idea of political philosophy—The function of war—Philosophy of history—Some comments on Hegel's philosophy of history.

Eleven: HEGEL (3)

270

The sphere of absolute Spirit—The philosophy of art—The philosophy of religion—The relation between religion and philosophy—Hegel's philosophy of the history of philosophy—The influence of Hegel and the division between right-wing and left-wing Hegelians.

APPENDIX: A Short Bibliography

295

NOTES

309