

Contents

- 1 Tocatta and Fugue for the Foreigner 1
Scorched Happiness (3), The Loss and the Challenge (5), Suffering, Ebullience, and Mask (6), Aloofness (7), Confidence (8), Parceling (9), A Melancholia (9), Ironists and Believers (10), Meeting (11), Sole Liberty (12), A Hatred (13), The Silence of Polyglots (15), "The Former Separations From the Body" (17), Immigrants, Hence Workers (17), Slaves and Masters (19), Void or Baroque Speech (20), Orphans (21), Do You Have Any Friends? (23), The "Meursault case" or "We Are All Like Meursault" (24), Dark Origins (29), Explosion: Sex or Disease (30), An Ironic Wandering or the Polymorphous Memory of Sebastian Knight (33), Why France? (38).
- 2 The Greeks Among Barbarians, Suppliants, and Metics 41
The First Foreigners: Foreign Women (From Io to the Danaïdes) (42), Suppliants and Proxeni (47), The Status of Foreigners in Homeric Times (49), Barbarians and Metics During the Classical Age (50), Hellenistic Cosmopolitanism (56), Stoic Conciliation: Universalism . . . (57), . . . and Perversion (60).

- 3 The Chosen People and the Choice of Foreignness 65
 Foreigner or Convert (65), Ruth the Moabite (69).
- 4 Paul and Augustine: The Therapeutics of Exile and Pilgrimage 77
 Paul the Cosmopolitan (77), The New Alliance (81), Civitas Peregrina (83), Caritas (84), Peregrine Hospitality (85), The Late Empire: Integrating the Peregrines (88), The Elusive Foreigner in the Middle Ages (91).
- 5 By What Right Are You a Foreigner? 95
 Jus Soli, Jus Sanguinis (95), Man or Citizen (97), Without Political Rights (99), A Second-Rate Right? (101), Thinking the Commonplace (103).
- 6 The Renaissance, "So Shapeless and Diverse in Composition" . . . 105
 Dante the Exile: From "Salty Taste" to "Golden Mirror" (105), The Machiavellian State (109), From Rabelais the Marvelous to the Marvels of the World by Way of Erasmus (111), Thomas More: A Strange Utopia (116), Michel de Montaigne's Universal Self (118), Constant Cheerfulness (119), Of Cannibals and Coaches (120), Voyages, Cosmographies, Missions (123), A Cosmopolitan Gaul (125).
- 7 On Foreigners and the Enlightenment 127
 Montesquieu: The Fully Political and the Private Sector (128), The Foreigner: The Alter Ego of the Philosopher (133), The Strange Man, the Cynic, and the Cosmopolitan. 1. Rameau's Nephew Between Diogenes and Myself (134), 2. Fougeret de Monbron, a Cosmopolitan with a "Shaggy Heart" (140), 3. The Nephew with Hegel: Culture as Strangeness (144), Might Culture Be French? (146), The Rights of Man and Citizen (148), Foreigners During the Revolution, 1. Universal Brotherhood and the Birth of Nationalism (154), 2. Anacharsis Cloutz: The "Speaker of

	Mankind " against the word "Foreigner" (161), 3.
	Thomas Paine: The "Citizen of the World" Wants to Save the King (164).
8	Might Not Universality Be . . . Our Own Foreignness?	169
	Kant the Universalist Pacifist (170), The Patriotic Nation Between Common Sense and Volkgeist (173), Nationalism as Intimacy: From Herder to the Romanticists (177), Freud: Heimlich/Unheimlich—The Uncanny Strangeness (182), The Other is My (Own and Proper) Unconscious (183), A Semiology of Uncanny Strangeness (185), Subjects, Artists, and . . . a King (188), The Strange Within Us (191).
9	In Practice . . .	193
	Index	217