

Contents

Preface	vii
Sources	x
1 Hermeneutics and Social Theory	1
Hermeneutics, positivism, social theory	4
The theory of structuration	8
The double hermeneutic	11
Conclusion	14
2 The Theory of Structuration: a Critique (by Fred Dallmayr)	18
Response to Dallmayr (by Anthony Giddens)	26
Rejoinder to Giddens (by Fred Dallmayr)	27
3 Action, Structure, Power	28
Approaches to the theory of action	28
Concepts of structure	32
The duality of structure	36
4 Classical Social Theory and the Origins of Modern Sociology	40
Some myths identified	40
The problem of order	43
The myth of conservatism	47
The myth of schism	51
Some implications	53
The theory of industrial society	54
The epistemological status of social theory	60
5 The High Priest of Positivism: Auguste Comte	68

6	Schutz and Parsons: Problems of Meaning and Subjectivity	76
7	Habermas's Social and Political Theory	82
8	Labour and Interaction	100
9	Durkheim, Socialism and Marxism	117
	Critical comments	120
	The state: Durkheim and Marx	122
	State power and citizenship	127
10	Literature and Society: Raymond Williams	133
11	The Improbable Guru: Re-Reading Marcuse	144
	Marcuse's analysis: its leading themes	145
	Some substantive comments	151
	Technology, freedom, politics	156
12	Class Division, Class Conflict and Citizenship Rights	164
13	Classes, Capitalism and the State	181
14	Power, the Dialectic of Control and Class Structuration	197
	Weber: bureaucracy and capitalism	200
	Braverman: class domination and capitalism	205
	Conclusion: agency and alienation	212
15	From Mark to Nietzsche? Neo-Conservatism, Foucault, and Problems in Contemporary Political Theory	215
	Index	231