

Contents

Introduction	37
--------------	----

PART ONE

THE NATURE AND KNOWLEDGE OF ESSENTIAL BEING

Chapter 1

Fact and Essence	45
1 Natural knowledge and experience	45
2 Fact. Inseparability of fact and essence	46
3 Essential insight and individual intuition	48
4 Essential insight and the play of fancy. Knowledge of essences independent of all knowledge of facts	50
5 Judgments about essence and judgments of eidetic generality	51
6 Some fundamental concepts. Generality and necessity	53
7 Sciences of facts and sciences of the essence	55
8 Interdependence of the sciences of fact and of essence	56
9 Region and regional eidetics	57
10 Region and category. The analytic region and its categories	59
11 Syntactical objectivities and ultimate substrata. Syntactical categories	62
12 Genus and species	63
13 Generalization and formalization	64
14 Substrative categories. The substrative essence and the τὸδε τι	66
15 Independent and dependent objects. Concretum and Individual	67
16 Region and category in the sphere of substantive meaning. Synthetic cognitions a priori	69
17 Conclusions of the logical considerations	70

Chapter 2

Naturalistic Misconstructions	72
18 Introduction to the critical discussion	72
19 The empiricist's identification of experience and primordial dator act	74
20 Empiricism and scepticism	76
21 Obscurities on the idealistic side	78
22 The reproach of Platonic realism. Essence and concept	80
23 Spontaneity of ideation, essence, and fiction	82
24 The principle of all principles	83
25 The positivist at work as natural scientist, the natural scientist in reflective thought as positivist	84
26 Sciences of the dogmatic and sciences of the philosophic standpoint	86

PART TWO

THE FUNDAMENTAL PHENOMENOLOGICAL OUTLOOK

Chapter 3

The Thesis of the Natural Standpoint and its Suspension	91
27 The world of the natural standpoint: I and my world about me	91
28 The cogito . My natural world-about-me and the ideal worlds-about-me	93
29 The "other" Ego-subject and the intersubjective natural world-about-me	94
30 The general thesis of the natural standpoint	95
31 Radical alteration of the natural thesis. "Disconnexion," "Bracketing"	96
32 The phenomenological ἐποχή	99

Chapter 4

Consciousness and Natural Reality	101
33 Intimation concerning "pure" or "transcendental consciousness" as phenomenological residuum	101
34 The essence of consciousness as theme of inquiry	103

15	The cogito as "act." The modal form of marginal actuality	105
16	Intentional experience. Experience in general	107
17	The "directedness" of the pure ego in the cogito , and the noticing that apprehends	109
18	Reflexions on acts. Immanent and transcendent perceptions	111
19	Consciousness and natural reality. The view of the "man in the street"	113
20	"Primary" and "secondary" qualities. The bodily given thing "mere appearance" of the "physically true"	115
21	The real nature of perception and its transcendent object	117
22	Being as Consciousness and Being as Reality. — Intrinsic difference between the modes of intuition	120
23	Light on a fundamental error	122
24	The merely phenomenal being of the transcendent, the absolute being of the immanent	124
25	Unperceived experience, unperceived reality	128
26	Indubitability of immanent, dubitability of transcendent perception	130

Chapter 5

27	The Region of Pure Consciousness	133
28	The natural world as correlate of consciousness	133
29	Logical possibility and real absurdity of a world outside our own	135
30	Absolute consciousness as residuum after the nullifying of the world	136
31	The phenomenological viewpoint and pure consciousness as the field of phenomenology	139
32	The import of the transcendental preliminary reflexions	141
33	Supplementary remarks. The physical thing and the "unknown cause of appearances"	143
34	Animalia and psychological consciousness	149
35	The same continued. The transcendent psychological experience contingent and relative, the transcendental experience necessary and absolute	151

- 55 Conclusion. All reality exists through "the dispensing of meaning." No "subjective idealism" 15

Chapter 6

The Phenomenological Reductions 15

- 56 The question concerning the extension of the phenomenological reduction. The natural and the mental sciences 15
- 57 The question of the suspension of the pure Ego 15
- 58 The transcendence of God suspended 15
- 59 The transcendence of the eidetic. The suspending of pure logic as mathesis universalis 15
- 60 The suspending of the material-eidetic disciplines 16
- 61 The methodological importance of the systematic theory of phenomenological reductions 16
- 62 Epistemological preliminaries. "Dogmatic" and phenomenological standpoints 16

PART THREE

PROCEDURE OF PURE PHENOMENOLOGY IN RESPECT OF METHODS AND PROBLEMS

Chapter 7

Preliminary Considerations of Method 17

- 63 The special importance for phenomenology of considerations of method 17
- 64 The self-suspending of the phenomenologist 17
- 65 The reference of phenomenology back to its own self 17
- 66 Faithful expression of the clearly given. Unambiguous terms 17
- 67 Method of clarification. The "nearness" and "remoteness" of given data 17
- 68 Genuine and counterfeit grades of clearness. The essence of normal clarifying 17
- 69 The method of apprehending essences with perfect clearness 18
- 70 The rôle of perception in the method for clarifying the essence. The privileged position of free fancy 18

71	The problem of the possibility of a descriptive eidetic of experiences	184
72	Concrete, abstract, "mathematical" sciences of Essential Being	185
73.	Application to the problem of phenomenology. Description and exact determination	188
74	Descriptive and exact sciences	190
75	Phenomenology as descriptive theory of the essence of pure experiences	191

Chapter 8

General Structures of Pure Consciousness		194
76	The theme of the following studies	194
77	Reflexion as the basic peculiarity of the sphere of experience. Studies on reflexion	197
78	Phenomenological study of reflexions upon experience	200
79	Critical excursus. Phenomenology and the difficulties of "self-observation"	204
80	The relation of experiences to the pure Ego	213
81	Phenomenological time and the time-consciousness	215
82	Continuation. The threefold limit of experience, as at once the limit of reflexion upon experience	218
83	Apprehension of the unitary stream of experience as "Idea"	220
84	Intentionality as the main phenomenological theme	222
85	Sensile ὕλη, intentional μορφή	226
86	The functional problems	230

Chapter 9

Noesis and Noema		235
87	Introductory remarks	235
88	Real (reelle) and intentional factors of experience. The noema	237
89	Noematic statements and statements concerning reality. The noema in the psychological sphere	240

90	The "noematic meaning" and the distinction between "immanent" and "real (wirklichen) objects"	241
91	Extension to the farthest reaches of Intentionality	245
92	The transformations of Attention in regard both to noesis and noema	246
93	Transition to the noetic-noematic structures of the higher sphere of consciousness	250
94	Noesis and noema in the sphere of the judgment	251
95	The analogous distinctions in the spheres of Sentiment and Will	255
96	Transition to the chapters that follow. Concluding remarks	257

Chapter 10

Theory of the Noetic-Noematic Structures: Elaboration of the Problems		260
97	The hyletic and noetic phases as real (reelle). The noematic as non-real phases of experience	260
98	Mode of being of the noema. Doctrine of forms for noeses and for noemata	264
99	The noematic nucleus and its distinguishing marks in the sphere of presentations and representations	267
100	Levels in the construction of presentations in noesis and noema, in accordance with essential laws	269
101	Characteristics of levels as such. Different types of "reflexions"	271
102	Transition to new dimensions in characterization	272
103	Characters distinctive of Being and of Belief	273
104	Doxic modalities as modifications	275
105	The modality of Belief, as Belief; the modality of Being, as Being	277
106	Affirmation and Negation together with their noematic correlates	278
107	Reiterated modifications	279
108	Noematical characters are not determined through "reflexion"	280
109	The neutrality-modification	282
110	Neutralized consciousness and the critical authority of the reason. The nature of Assuming	284

111	Neutrality-modification and Fancy	285
112	Repeatability of the fancy-modification at successive levels; non-repeatability of the neutrality-modification	287
113	Actual and potential positings	289
114	Further concerning neutrality-modification and the potentiality of the theses	293
115	Applications. The extended concept of Act. Act-fulfilments and impulses to act	297
116	Transition to new analyses. The secondary noeses and their noematic correlates	300
117	The secondary theses and conclusion of the doctrine of the modifications of the neutralizing process. The general concept of "Theses"	303
118	Syntheses of consciousness. Syntactic forms	307
119	Transformation of polythetic into monothetic acts	309
120	Positionality and neutrality in the sphere of the syntheses	311
121	The doxic syntactics in the spheres of feeling and will	312
122	Modes of carrying out articulated syntheses. The "Thema"	315
123	Vagueness and distinctness as modes in the fulfilling of synthetic acts	317
124	The noetic-noematic stratum of the "Logos." Meaning and meaning something	318
125	The completing modalities in the sphere of logical expression and the method of clarification	322
126	Completeness and generality of expression	324
127	Expression of judgments and expression of the noemata of feeling	325

PART FOUR
REASON AND REALITY (WIRKLICHKEIT)

Chapter 11

	Noematic Meaning and Relation to the Object	331
28	Introduction	331
29	"Content" and "Object"; the content as "meaning"	333
30	Delimitation of the essence "noematic meaning"	335

34 / Contents

131	The "object," the "determinable X in the noematic sense"	337
132	The nucleus as meaning in the mode of its full realization	340
133	The noematic meaning as posited. Thetically and synthetically posited meanings (positions). Posited meanings in the domain of presentations	340
134	The apophantic formal doctrine	342
135	Object and consciousness. Transition to the phenomenology of Reason	345

Chapter 12

Phenomenology of the Reason		350
136	The first basic form of the rational consciousness: The primordial dator "vision"	350
137	Self-evidence and Insight. "Primordial" and "pure," assertoric and apodeictic self-evidence	353
138	Adequate and inadequate self-evidence	354
139	Interweavings of all the varieties of Reason. Theoretic, axiological, and practical Truth	357
140	Confirmation. Warranty (Berechtigung) apart from self-evidence. Equivalence of the positional and neutral insights	360
141	Immediate and mediate rational positing. Mediate self-evidence	361
142	Being and the Thesis of Reason	364
143	The adequate presentation of a Thing as an Idea in the Kantian sense	366
144	Reality and primordial dator consciousness: Concluding determinations	367
145	Critical consideration of the phenomenology of Self-evidence	368

Chapter 13

Grades of Generality in the Ordering of the Problems of the Theoretic Reason		373
146	The most general problems	373
147	Ramifications of the problems. Formal Logic, Axiology, and Praxis	374

148	Problems of the theoretical reason as bearing on Formal Ontology	377
149	Problems of the theoretical reason as bearing on the regional ontologies. The problem of the phenomenological constituting function	379
150	Continuation. The Thing-region as transcendental clue	383
151	Strata of the transcendental constitution of the Thing. Supplementary considerations	387
152	Transfer of the problem of the transcendental constituting function to other regions	388
153	The full extension of the transcendental problem. The inquiries classified	390
	Analytical Index	397
	Index to Proper Names	445