Part One

The Lectures on Internal Time-Consciousness from the Year 1905

| | |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| Introduction | 21 |
| § 1. The Exclusion of Objective Time | 22 |
| § 2. The Question of the "Origin of Time" | 27 |
| Section One: Bretano's Theory Concerning the Origin of Time | 29 |
| § 3. The Primordial Associations | 29 |
| § 4. The Gaining of the Future and Infinite Time | 33 |
| § 5. The Transformation of Ideas through Temporal Characters | 34 |
| § 6. Critique | 35 |
| Section Two: The Analysis of Time-Consciousness | 40 |
| § 7. The Interpretation of the Comprehension of Temporal Objects as Momentary Comprehension and as Enduring Act | 40 |
| § 8. Immanent Temporal Objects and Their Modes of Appearance | 44 |
| § 9. The Consciousness of the Appearances of Immanent Objects | 46 |
| § 10. The Continua of Running-Off Phenomena—The Diagram of Time | 48 |
| § 11. Primal Impression and Retentional Modification | 50 |
| § 12. Retention as Proper Intentionality | 52 |
| § 13. The Necessity for the Precedence of Impression over Every Retention—Self-evidence of Retention | 54 |

| | |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| § 14. Reproduction of Temporal Objects—Secondary Remembrance | 57 |
| § 15. The Modes of Accomplishment of Reproduction | 59 |
| § 16. Perception as Originary Presentation as Distinguished from Retention and Recollection | 60 |
| § 17. Perception as a Self-Giving Act in Contrast to Reproduction | 63 |
| § 18. The Significance of Recollection for the Constitution of the Consciousness of Duration and Succession | 64 |
| § 19. The Difference between Retention and Reproduction (Primary and Secondary Remembrance or Phantasy) | 68 |
| § 20. The "Freedom" of Reproduction | 71 |
| § 21. Levels of Clarity of Reproduction | 71 |
| § 22. The Certainty of Reproduction | 72 |
| § 23. The Coincidence of the Now Reproduced with a Past Now—The Distinction between Phantasy and Recollection | 74 |
| § 24. Protentions in Recollection | 76 |
| § 25. The Double Intentionality of Recollection | 77 |
| § 26. The Difference between Memory and Expectation | 79 |
| § 27. Memory as Consciousness of Having-Been-Perceived | 81 |
| § 28. Memory and Figurative Consciousness—Memory as Positing Reproduction | 83 |
| § 29. Memory of the Present | 84 |
| § 30. The Preservation of the Objective Intention in the Retentional Modification | 85 |
| § 31. Primal Impressions and Objective Individual Temporal Points | 88 |
| § 32. The Part of Reproduction in the Constitution of the One Objective Time | 94 |
| § 33. Some A priori Temporal Laws | 96 |
| Section Three: The Levels of Constitution of Time and Temporal Objects | |
| § 34. The Differentiation of the Levels of Constitution | 98 |
| § 35. Differences between the Constituted Unities and the Constitutive Flux | 98 |
| § 36. The Temporally Constitutive Flux as Absolute Subjectivity | 100 |
| § 37. Appearances of Transcendent Objects as Constituted Unities | 100 |

| | |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| § 38. Unity of the Flux of Consciousness and the Constitution of Simultaneity and Succession | 102 |
| § 39. The Double Intentionality of Retention and the Constitution of the Flux of Consciousness | 105 |
| § 40. The Constituted Immanent Content | 110 |
| § 41. Self-Evidence of the Immanent Content—Alteration and Constancy | 111 |
| § 42. Impression and Reproduction | 115 |
| § 43. The Constitution of Thing-Appearances and Things—Constituted Apprehensions and Primal Apprehensions | 117 |
| § 44. Internal and External Perception | 122 |
| § 45. The Constitution of Non-Temporal Transcendencies | 124 |

Part Two

Addenda and Supplements to the Analysis of Time-Consciousness from the Years 1905–1910

| | |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Appendix I: Primal Impression and Its Continuum of Modifications | 129 |
| Appendix II: Presentification and Phantasy—Impression and Imagination | 133 |
| Appendix III: The Correlational Intentions of Perception and Memory—The Modes of Time-Consciousness | 137 |
| Appendix IV: Recollection and the Constitution of Temporal Objects and Objective Time | 143 |
| Appendix V: The Simultaneity of Perception and the Perceived | 146 |
| Appendix VI: Comprehension of the Absolute Flux—Perception in the Fourfold Sense | 149 |
| Appendix VII: The Constitution of Simultaneity | 155 |
| Appendix VIII: The Double Intentionality of the Stream of Consciousness | 157 |
| Appendix IX: Primal Consciousness and the Possibility of Reflection | 161 |
| Appendix X: The Objectivation of Time and of the Material in Time | 164 |
| Appendix XI: Adequate and Inadequate Perception | 170 |
| Appendix XII: Internal Consciousness and the Comprehension of Lived Experiences | 175 |
| Appendix XIII: The Constitution of Spontaneous Unities as Immanent Temporal Objects—Judgment as a Temporal Form and Absolute Time-Constituting Consciousness | 182 |
