

Contents

|             |   |     |
|-------------|---|-----|
|             | Preface   | vii |
|             | Introduction  | 3   |
| Part One.   | International Relations as a State of Nature                | 11  |
|             | 1. The Skepticism of the Realists                           | 15  |
|             | 2. The Hobbesian Situation                                  | 27  |
|             | 3. International Relations as a State of Nature             | 35  |
|             | 4. The Basis of International Morality                      | 50  |
|             | 5. From International Skepticism to the Morality of States  | 63  |
| Part Two.   | The Autonomy of States                                      | 67  |
|             | 1. State Autonomy and Individual Liberty                    | 71  |
|             | 2. Nonintervention, Paternalism, and Neutrality             | 83  |
|             | 3. Self-determination                                       | 92  |
|             | 4. Eligibility, Boundaries, and Nationality                 | 105 |
|             | 5. Economic Dependence                                      | 116 |
|             | 6. State Autonomy and Domestic Social Justice               | 121 |
| Part Three. | International Distributive Justice                          | 125 |
|             | 1. Social Cooperation, Boundaries, and the Basis of Justice | 129 |
|             | 2. Entitlements to Natural Resources                        | 136 |
|             | 3. Interdependence and Global Distributive Justice          | 143 |
|             | 4. Contrasts between International and Domestic Society     | 154 |
|             | 5. The Rights of States                                     | 161 |
|             | 6. Applications to the Nonideal World                       | 169 |
|             | Conclusion  | 177 |
|             | Afterword   | 185 |
|             | Works Cited   | 221 |
|             | Index   | 237 |