

Contents

List of Boxes	vii
List of Acronyms	viii
Foreword by Thandika Mkandawire, Director of UNRISD	x
Preface and Acknowledgements	xi
1 • Transnationalizing Women’s Health Movements	1
From North to South: de-centring leadership, shifting vantage points	3
Ethical frameworks of reproductive and sexual rights	7
Ethical frameworks: relinking the body and social development, human rights and basic needs	15
A note on the irrepressibility of rights – deeper into the thicket	22
2 • The UN Conferences as Sites of Discursive Struggle: Gains and Fault Lines	31
Reassessing Cairo and Beijing: substantive achievements and shortfalls	35
Learning from the fault lines: political dynamics at the Social Summit and the ‘Plus Fives’	50
Back to the future: Copenhagen+5 in 2000	57
Towards polycentric strategies and multiform visions	64
3 • HIV/AIDS and the Human Right to Health: on a Collision Course with Global Capitalism	76
‘People’s health before patents and profits’: the global campaign for access to medicines	77
‘Equity pricing’ or the human right to health?	108
Specifying the human right to health in the era of HIV/AIDS	116

4 • Managing Health under Global Capitalism: Equity vs Productivity	133
Globalization = global capitalism	133
Global capitalism reforming itself: the World Bank on poverty and health	142
Health sector reforms: Where is gender? Where is justice?	151
Alternative ethics of health provision	172
5 • Implementing International Norms at the National Level: Women's Health NGOs in the Firing Line	188
NGOs as country-level implementers and monitors	190
NGOs as service providers in lieu of the state	209
NGOs as 'partners' in health reform	222
The many faces of privatization	236
6 • Conclusion: Reflections on Global Governance and Transnational Feminist Movements in an Era of Infinite War	247
Prologue	247
The need for global governance	252
The strategic place of transnational NGOs and coalitions	268
Epilogue: is another world possible?	275
Bibliography	281
Index	296

Not sure about this