

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Introduction	viii
1 Reason, science and the domination of matter	1
Introduction	1
Femininity and Greek theories of knowledge	2
Francis Bacon: knowledge as the subjugation of Nature	10
2 The divided soul: manliness and effeminacy	19
Introduction: Plato on Reason	19
Philo: 'manly Reason' and the 'entanglements' of sense	22
Augustine: spiritual equality and natural subordination	28
Aquinas: 'the principle of the human race' and his 'helpmate'	33
3 Reason as attainment	38
Introduction	38
Descartes's method	39
Hume on Reason and the passions	50

vi The Man of Reason

4	Reason and progress	57
	Introduction	57
	Rousseau: the lost youth of the world	58
	Kant: from immaturity to enlightenment	64
	Hegel: Reason as the unfolding of Nature	70
5	The public and the private	74
	Introduction: complementary consciousnesses	74
	Hegel: the feminine nether world	80
6	The struggle for transcendence	86
	Introduction	86
	Hegel: self-consciousness as achievement	88
	Sartre and de Beauvoir: women and transcendence	93
	De Beauvoir on woman as other	96
7	Concluding remarks	103
	Notes	111
	Bibliographical essay	123
	Index	135