

Temporary Work

The Gendered Rise of a Precarious Employment Relationship

LEAH F. VOSKO

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO PRESS
Toronto Buffalo London

Contents

List of Tables ix

Acknowledgments xi

Abbreviations xiii

Introduction 3

1 'Labour Is Not a Commodity': Shifting Employment Norms and the Modern Labour Market Intermediary 14

2 Putting Workers in Their Place: The Early History of Private Employment Agencies 45

3 'Halfway Houses' for 'Housewives': The Birth of the Temporary Help Industry 78

4 From Stop-Gap Workers to Staffing Services: The Expansion of the Temporary Help Industry 117

5 Promising 'Flexibility' and Delivering Precariousness: The Shape of the Contemporary Temporary Employment Relationship 157

6 'Flexible Workers,' Intractable Regulatory Regime: Regulating the Contemporary Temporary Employment Relationship 200

7 'No Jobs, Lots of Work': The Rise of the Temporary Employment Relationship and the Emergence of Workfare-Driven Social Policy 230

8 The Challenge of Limiting Labour Market Fragmentation 251

viii Contents

Appendix A: Qualitative Methodology 279

Appendix B: Interviews 281

Notes 285

References 333

Index 359