

NICOMACHEAN ETHICS

ARISTOTLE

Translated, with introduction and notes, by

MARTIN OSTWALD

.....
The Library of Liberal Arts

published by

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY, INC.

INDIANAPOLIS • NEW YORK

COPYRIGHT © 1962

THE LIBERAL ARTS PRESS, INC.

A Division of

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY, INC.

All Rights Reserved

Printed in the United States of America

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number 62-15690

Eleventh Printing

CONTENTS

.....

INTRODUCTION	xi
BIBLIOGRAPHY	xxv
NOTE ON THE TEXT	xxvii

NICOMACHEAN ETHICS

Book One 3

1. The good as the aim of action (3)—2. Politics as the master science of the good (4)—3. The limitations of ethics and politics (5)—4. Happiness is the good, but many views are held about it (6)—5. Various views on the highest good (8)—6. Plato's view of the Good (9)—7. The good is final and self-sufficient; happiness is defined (14)—8. Popular views about happiness confirm our position (19)—9. How happiness is acquired (22)—10. Can a man be called "happy" during his lifetime? (23)—11. Do the fortunes of the living affect the dead? (26)—12. The praise accorded to happiness (27)—13. The psychological foundations of the virtues (29)

Book Two 33

1. Moral virtue as the result of habits (33)—2. Method in the practical sciences (35)—3. Pleasure and pain as the test of virtue (36)—4. Virtuous action and virtue (38)—5. Virtue defined: the genus (40)—6. Virtue defined: the differentia (41)—7. Examples of the mean in particular virtues (44)—8. The relation between the mean and its extremes (48)—9. How to attain the mean (49)

Book Three

52

1. Actions voluntary and involuntary (52)—2. Choice (58)—3. Deliberation (60)—4. Wish (63)—5. Man as responsible agent (64)—6. Courage and its sphere of operation (68)—7. Courage: its nature and its opposites (70)—8. Qualities similar to courage (72)—9. Courage: its relation to pleasure and pain (76)—10. Self-control and its sphere of operation (77)—11. Self-control: its nature and its opposites (79)—12. Self-indulgence (81)

Book Four

83

1. Generosity, extravagance, and stinginess (83)—2. Magnificence, vulgarity, and niggardliness (89)—3. High-mindedness, pettiness, and vanity (93)—4. Ambition and lack of ambition as the extremes of a nameless virtue (99)—5. Gentleness, short temper, and apathy (100)—6. Friendliness, obsequiousness, and grouchiness (102)—7. Truthfulness, boastfulness, and self-depreciation (104)—8. Wittiness, buffoonery, and boorishness (107)—9. Shame and shamelessness (109)

Book Five

111

1. The different kinds of justice; complete justice (111)—2. Partial justice: just action as distribution and as rectification (115)—3. Just action as fairness in distribution (118)—4. Just action as rectification (120)—5. Just action as reciprocity in the economic life of the state (123)—6. What is just in the political sense (129)—7. Just by nature and just by convention (131)—8. The various degrees of responsibility for just and unjust action (133)—9. Voluntariness and involuntariness in just and unjust action and suffering (136)—10. Equity and the equitable (141)—11. Is it possible to be unjust toward oneself?

Book Six

146

1. Moral and intellectual excellence; the psychological foundations of intellectual excellence (146)—2. The two kinds of intellectual excellence and their objects (147)—3. The qualities by which truth is attained: (a) pure science or knowledge (150)—4. (b) Art or applied science (151)—5. Practical wisdom (152)—6. (d) Intelligence (154)—7. (c) Theoretical wisdom (155)—8. Practical wisdom and politics (158)—9. Practical wisdom and excellence in deliberation (161)—10. Practical wisdom and understanding (164)—11. Practical wisdom and good sense (165)—12. The use of theoretical and practical wisdom (167)—13. Practical wisdom and moral virtue (170)

Book Seven

174

1. Moral strength and moral weakness: their relation to virtue and vice and current beliefs about them (174)—2. Problems in the current beliefs about moral strength and moral weakness (176)—3. Some problems solved: moral weakness and knowledge (180)—4. More problems solved: the sphere in which moral weakness operates (185)—5. Moral weakness and brutishness (189)—6. Moral weakness in anger (191)—7. Moral strength and moral weakness: tenacity and softness (194)—8. Moral weakness and self-indulgence (197)—9. Steadfastness in moral strength and moral weakness (199)—10. Moral weakness and practical wisdom (201)—11. Pleasure: some current views (203)—12. The views discussed: Is pleasure a good thing? (205)—13. The views discussed: Is pleasure the highest good? (208)—14. The views discussed: Are most pleasures bad? (210)

Book Eight

214

1. Why we need friendship (214)—2. The three things worthy of affection (217)—3. The three kinds of friendship (218)—4. Perfect friendship and imperfect friendship (221)—5. Friendship as a characteristic and as an activity (223)—6. Additional observations on the three kinds of friendship (224)—7. Friendship between unequals (227)—8. Giving and receiving affection (228)—9. Friendship and justice in the state (231)—10. The different political systems (233)—11. Friendship and justice in the different political systems (235)—12. Friendship within the family (237)—13. What equal friends owe to one another (240)—14. What unequal friends owe to one another (243)

Book Nine

245

1. How to measure what friends owe to one another (245)—2. Conflicting obligations (248)—3. When friendships are dissolved (250)—4. Self-love as the basis of friendship (252)—5. Friendship and good will (255)—6. Friendship and concord (256)—7. Good deeds and affection (258)—8. Self-love (260)—9. Friendship and happiness (263)—10. How many friends should we have? (267)—11. Friendship in good and in bad fortune (269)—12. Friends must live together (271)

Book Ten

273

1. The two views about pleasure (273)—2. Eudoxus' view: pleasure is the good (274)—3. The view that pleasure is evil (276)—4. The true character of pleasure (279)—5. The value of pleasure (282)—6. Happiness and activity (286)—7. Happiness, intelligence, and the contemplative life (288)—8. The advantages of the contemplative life (291)—9. Ethics and politics (295)

GLOSSARY

303