

Contents

Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction	xv
1 Some Aspects and Developments of Gestalt Psychology	3
2 The Place of Psychology in the System of Sciences	56
3 Goldstein's Conception of Biological Science	69
4 The Phenomenological and the Psychological Approach to Consciousness	89
5 Critical Study of Husserl's Nachwort	107
6 The Problem of Existence in Constitutive Phenomenology	116
7 On the Intentionality of Consciousness	124
8 On the Object of Thought	141
9 The Kantian and Husserlian Conceptions of Consciousness	148
10 Phenomenology of Thematics and of the Pure Ego: Studies of the Relation between Gestalt Theory and Phenomenology	175
11 A Non-egological Conception of Consciousness	287
12 William James's Theory of the "Transitive Parts" of the Stream of Consciousness	301
13 Contribution to the Phenomenological Theory of Perception	332
14 Philosophical Presuppositions of Logic	350
15 Gelb-Goldstein's Concept of "Concrete" and "Categorical" Attitude and the Phenomenology of Ideation	359
16 On a Perceptual Root of Abstraction	385
17 On the Conceptual Consciousness	390
18 The Last Work of Edmund Husserl	397
Index	449