

Contents

Preface	ix
Introduction: The Background to a Scientific Theology	i
The Historical Origins of the Project	i
The Vision of a Scientific Theology	10
I. Prolegomena
1. The Legitimacy of a Scientific Theology	17
Science as the 'handmaid of theology' ( ancilla         theologiae )	18
The ontological imperative for theological engagement with the natural sciences	21
The meanings of 'science'	22
The fragmentation of intellectual discourse	23
2. The Approach to be Adopted	25
The problem of transient theological trends	25
The provisionality of scientific conclusions	27
Engaging with Christian theology, not 'religions'	31

2. Nature	35
3. The Construction of Nature	35
The many faces of nature	36
The history of nature	37
The deconstruction of nature	39
4. The Christian Doctrine of Creation	44
The biblical concept of creation	46
Creation out of nothing ( ex nihilo ): the development of a doctrine	49
Christian formulations of the doctrine of creation	52
An emphasis on creation: a Deist strategy?	53
5. Implications of a Christian Doctrine of Creation	59
Created rationality and the possibility of theological reflection	60
The ordering of creation	66
6. The Purpose and Place of Natural Theology	71
The historical origins of modern natural theology	75
The biblical foundations of a natural theology	77
The philosophical debate over natural theology	80
The Barthian objection to natural theology: an evaluation	82
Thomas F. Torrance on natural theology	86
The place of natural theology within a scientific theology	88
3. Reality	93
7. Rationality and Knowledge in Theology and the Natural Sciences	94

A critique of post-liberal coherentism: George Lindbeck	101
8. Natural Theology and the Trans-Traditional Rationality of the Christian Tradition	105
Alasdair MacIntyre and the role of tradition	108
Mathematics and trans-traditional rationality	116
Natural theology and the trans-traditional religious quest	117
Natural theology and the trans-traditional sense of wonder	118
Natural law and the trans-traditional quest for goodness	119
John Milbank and the critique of secular reason: an assessment	120
9. The Foundations of Realism in the Natural Sciences	125
Realism as the working philosophy of the physical sciences	126
Rivals to scientific realism	129
Retreating from reality: postmodern anti-realism	134
10. Critical Realism: Engaging with a Stratified Reality	139
11. The Encounter with Reality: The Contours of a Scientific Theology	153
Scientific theology as a response to reality	153
Scientific theology as an a posteriori discipline	158
Scientific theology as a response to its distinctive object	161
Scientific theology offers an explanation of reality	165
Why a scientific theology is Christocentric	168

4. Theory	171
12. The Legitimacy of Theory within a Scientific Theology	172
Reductionist foreclosures: some hesitations over theory	178
Theory and defamiliarization	181
Theory and the redemption of particulars	184
The issue of closure in theory	186
The problem of a 'non-dogmatic' Christianity	188
The social function of doctrine	191
13. The Representation of Reality in a Scientific Theology	194
Analogical reasoning in a scientific theology	197
14. The Place of Explanation in a Scientific Theology	207
The concept of 'revelation' in a scientific theology	209
The transmission of revelation	219
A scientific theology and the explanation of reality	221
Heresy, orthodoxy, and the development of doctrine	227
15. The Place of Metaphysics in a Scientific Theology	234
Conclusion	247
Notes	253
Index	265