

CONTENTS

Preface	ix
1 Systematic Theology and Postmodernism	1
The postmodern shift	1
Can theology still make universal claims?	4
What it means to take science seriously	5
God active in the world	9
 PART I: THE GOD WHO ACTS: TOWARDS A BIBLICAL THEOLOGY OF GOD AND THE WORLD
2 What Is This World Which Thou Hast Made?
God's Relation to the World in the Hebrew Bible	15
The doctrine of creation in the Hebrew Bible	17
The world's relation to God	27
Humanity and the image of God	30
The fall	39
First implications for a theology of nature	45
Conclusion	48
3 Christology and Creation: Struggling with the Particularity of the Christian Story	55
Indispensability of the kerygma	57
Implications of the Christ event	59
The Trinity	62
Theology, philosophy and history	65

CONTENTS

Embracing one particular among others	69
Who bears the burden of proof?	70
4 Rethinking the Relation of God and the World: Panentheism and the Contribution of Philosophy	82
Moving from the texts to the doctrine of God	83
From classical theism to panentheism	88
Arguments for and implications of panentheism	96
Rethinking the so-called theistic arguments	106
The God of infinite perfection and the God of Jesus Christ	114

PART II: THE NEW SCIENTIFIC CONTEXT

5 Creation and Cosmology: What Theologians Can and Cannot Learn from Scientific Cosmology	127
Non-theistic non-materialism	128
Using science to convey insights about the spiritual nature of the cosmos	130
Science usurps the role of theology	132
Science itself challenges reductionism and supports theistic design	136
Theology has the interpretive authority over science	142
Faith 'discovers' belief in the Creator as the best answer	143
Holism without transcendence	145
The desirability of maintaining a mystical (pantheistic) response to the world	147
Sophisticated (religiously tinged) naturalism	150
Implications of the discussion	155
A theological response	156
Conclusion	160

PART III: TOWARDS A THEOLOGY OF DIVINE ACTION

6 The Presumption of Naturalism	169
The presumption of naturalism	171
Historical changes in the presumption	172
The parity between perceptual and religious experience	174
Where religious causal accounts stand on equal footing	175
Improbable but not impossible	177
Psychological miracles	181
Conclusion	183
Theological implications	185

CONTENTS

7 Scientific Causality, Divine Causality	188
Divine action in an age of science	188
Finding genuine openness in the physical world	193
Possible interventions and actual interventions	197
The contemporary debate about divine causality in science	200
8 Understanding Human and Divine Agency	232
Parameters for a theology of God and world: the panentheistic analogy	235
Theories of personhood and theological preferences	241
In defence of emergentist supervenience	247
The divine subject: theology's unique contribution	257
 Index	 270