

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	1
1: David C. Lindberg Science and the Early Church	19
2: Edward Grant Science and Theology in the Middle Ages	49
3: Robert S. Westman The Copernicans and the Churches	76
4: William R. Shea Galileo and the Church	114
5: William B. Ashworth, Jr. Catholicism and Early Modern Science	136
6: Gary B. Deason Reformation Theology and the Mechanistic Conception of Nature	167
7: Charles Webster Puritanism, Separatism, and Science	192
8: Richard S. Westfall The Rise of Science and the Decline of Orthodox Christianity: A Study of Kepler, Descartes, and Newton	218
9: Margaret C. Jacob Christianity and the Newtonian Worldview	238
10: Roger Hahn Laplace and the Mechanistic Universe	256
11: Jacques Roger The Mechanistic Conception of Life	277

12: Martin J. S. Rudwick The Shape and Meaning of Earth History	296
13: James R. Moore Geologists and Interpreters of Genesis in the Nineteenth Century	322
14: A. Hunter Dupree Christianity and the Scientific Community in the Age of Darwin	351
15: Frederick Gregory The Impact of Darwinian Evolution on Protestant Theology in the Nineteenth Century	369
16: Ronald L. Numbers The Creationists	391
17: Erwin N. Hiebert Modern Physics and Christian Faith	424
18: Keith E. Yandell Protestant Theology and Natural Science in the Twentieth Century	448
A Guide to Further Reading	473
Notes on Contributors	485
Index	489