

The Philosophy of Husserl

Burt C. Hopkins

McGill-Queen's University Press
Montreal & Kingston • Ithaca

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Abbreviations	xi
Prolegomenon: Husserl's turn to history and pure phenomenology	1
I. Plato's and Aristotle's theory of eidē
1. Plato's Socratic theory of eidē : the first pillar of the ancient precedent to pure phenomenology	21
2. Plato's arithmological theory of eidē : the second pillar of the ancient precedent to pure phenomenology	34
3. Aristotle's criticism of Plato's theory of eidē : the third (and final) pillar of the ancient precedent to pure phenomenology	60
II. From descriptive psychology to transcendentally pure phenomenology
4. Origin of the task of pure phenomenology	83
5. Pure phenomenology and Platonism	96
6. Pure phenomenology as the transcendental-phenomenological investigation of absolute consciousness	110
7. Transcendental phenomenology of absolute consciousness and phenomenological philosophy	125
8. Limits of the transcendental-phenomenological investigation of pure consciousness	139
III. From the phenomenology of transcendental consciousness to that of monadological intersubjectivity
9. Phenomenological philosophy as transcendental idealism	148

10. The intersubjective foundation of transcendental idealism: the immanent transcendency of the world's objectivity	156
IV. From monadological intersubjectivity to the historical a priori constitutive of all meaning
11. The pure phenomenological motivation of Husserl's turn to history	174
12. The essential connection between intentional history and actual history	181
13. The historicity of both the intelligibility of ideal meanings and the possibility of actual history	187
14. Desedimentation and the link between intentional history and the constitution of a historical tradition	192
15. Transcendental phenomenology as the only true explanation of objectivity and all meaningful problems in previous philosophy	204
V. The unwarranted historical presuppositions guiding the fundamental ontological and deconstructive criticisms of transcendental philosophy
16. The methodological presupposition of the ontico-ontological critique of intentionality: Plato's Socratic seeing of the eidē	216
17. The mereological presupposition of fundamental ontology: that Being as a whole has a meaning overall	232
18. The presupposition behind the proto-deconstructive critique of intentional historicity: the conflation of intrasubjective and intersubjective idealities	246
19. The presupposition behind the deconstruction of phenomenology: the subordination of being to speech	254
Epilogue: Transcendental-phenomenological criticism of the criticism of phenomenological cognition	264
Coda: Phenomenological self-responsibility and the singularity of transcendental philosophy	273
Notes	275
Bibliography	283
Index	287