1 Continuity as the Criterion of Identity over Time: The Classical Theory of Continuity	1
I Introduction: criteria of identity	1
II Defining spatio-temporal continuity	5
III Further conditions on continuity: necessity and sufficiency	15
IV A note on concept-responsiveness and imaginary cases	32
2 Continuity as the Criterion of Identity over Time: Continuity without Stages?	37
I A basic question about continuity	37
II A via media?	39
III The problem of unity in plurality: the inadequacy of a Fregean or quasi-Fregean solution	43
IV Neutral counting	46
V The epistemological problem	49
VI The ontological problem	53
VII Consequences of the above problems	56
VIII A note on personal identity	59
3 The Ontology of Stages (Being the Orthodox/Humean Theory of Identity)	63
I Preamble: object-stages as material parts of persistents	63
II An outline of the theory of object-stages (or temporal parts of persistents)	69
III Questions concerning individuation and number	73
IV Problems of predication and translation	74
V Summary of discussion so far	84
VI Some objections considered	85
VII Geometrical parts and the circularity objection	88

4	The Myth of Continuity: What's Wrong with Four-Dimensionalism?	93
	I Analogies between space and time	93
	II The idea of four-dimensionalism	103
	III Space-time and world-lines	105
	IV World-lines and identity	109
	V Four-dimensionalism and temporal parts	113
	VI An ultimate view of reality?	121
5	The Myth of Continuity: A Coherent Ontology?	125
	I Preamble	125
	II A preliminary diagnosis	127
	III The problem of translation	129
	IV The conceptual inseparability of temporal parts and life-histories	135
	V Further objections from the stage theorist and their replies	137
	VI The confusion of essence and accident	141
	VII Some results of the inquiry	143
6	Some Problems of Identity over Time Considered	147
	I Preamble	147
	II The problem of temporary intrinsics	148
	III An intrinsic fact?	156
	IV Vague identity?	164
7	Fission, Intermittence and the Primitiveness of Identity	175
	I Continuity and the counter-examples	175
	II The primitiveness of personal identity	178
	III Fission	185
	IV Intermittent existence	195
	V Conclusion	198
