

The Rise and Fall of Social Cohesion

The Construction and Deconstruction of Social Trust in the US, UK, Sweden, and Denmark

Christian Albrekt Larsen

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of Figures	xv
List of Tables	xix

Introduction

1. The Rise and Fall of Social Cohesion	3
1.1 The debate over social cohesion	5
1.2 The importance of trust in modern societies	9
1.3 Trends in the horizontal trust between citizens	12
1.4 The theoretical ambition	16
1.5 The historical similarities and the logic of comparison	18
1.6 The data material behind this book	23
1.6.1 Measuring public opinion by means of unique survey material	24
1.6.2 Measuring stereotypes by means of media pictures	24
1.6.3 Experimental data	27
1.7 Outline of the book	27

Part I. The Rise and Fall of Middle-Class Society: A Kernel of Truth

2. The Three Threats to the 'Golden-age' Social Fabric	31
2.1 The number of jobs in different sectors: a long-term overview	32
2.2 Increased competition for jobs: a larger population and women in the workforce	37
2.3 Increased competition for jobs: the experience of unemployment	39
2.4 Increased competition for jobs: immigration	41
2.5 The breakup of the nuclear family	44
2.6 The similar external shock to social cohesion	49

Contents

3. The Contingent Consequences of the Three Threats	51
3.1 The power resources of labour movements	51
3.2 The institutional legacy of the 'golden age'	55
3.3 The neo-liberal and social-democratic post-industrial trajectory	57
3.4 The contingent consequences on overall equality and poverty	59
3.5 Breakup of the nuclear family and the bottom of society	63
3.6 The contingent consequences for ethnic minorities	66
3.7 The contingent consequences and the overall structure of society	69
3.8 The contingent consequences	72

Part II. The Importance of Perceptions

4. A Social Constructivist Theory of Economic Inequality and Trust	79
4.1 The imagined incentive structure of fellow citizens	80
4.2 The impact of economic inequality and poverty	83
4.3 The middle-class outlook	85
4.4 Why 'the middle' can trust 'the middle'—but most times not 'the bottom'	87
4.5 Trust, ethnic minorities, and immigrants	90
4.6 The mass media and information about fellow citizens	91
4.7 The link between inequality, perception of living in a middle-class society, and trust at the macro-level	93
4.8 The social constructivist theory and the puzzle of change in trust levels	99
5. Perceptions of Middle-Class Society and Social Trust: A Micro-Perspective	102
5.1 Perceptions of society and people's trust in fellow citizens across generations	103
5.2 The link between the perception of living in middle-class society and the judgements of trustworthiness at the micro-level	107
5.3 The controlled effect from the perception of living in a middle-class society on the judgements of trustworthiness at the micro-level	108
5.4 Equal opportunities to get ahead and the trustworthiness of fellow citizens	113
5.5 The misperception of the size of ethnic out-groups in a comparative perspective	115
5.6 Exploring the media effects in a comparative perspective	118
5.7 Towards understanding the construction of perceptions	122

Part III. The Construction of Members of the Imagined National Community: The Case of 'The Bottom'

6. How to Study the Social Construction of 'The Bottom'	129
6.1 Selection of newspapers	131
6.2 Selection of time period and sampling of dates	135
6.3 Selection of articles and pictures	136
6.4 The presence of the poor and welfare recipients in the mass media	138
6.5 Pictures of the poor in broadsheet and tabloid newspapers	140
6.6 The pictures in the mass media—and in our heads	141
7. The Media Poor and the Stories about Them	143
7.1 The colour of the media poor	144
7.2 Distribution on gender, age, and employment status	146
7.3 The old white and the young coloured	148
7.4 The stories about the media poor	149
7.5 The negative stories	152
7.6 The harsh British versus the soft Swedish and Danish tabloid press	154
7.7 The colour of positive and negative poverty stories	156
7.8 The social construction of 'the bottom'—judged by quantitative measures	157
8. The Stereotypes of the 'Bottom' and the 'Middle'	161
8.1 The puzzle of the public perception of black Americans	162
8.2 The untrustworthy men 'at the bottom'	164
8.3 The untrustworthy women 'at the bottom'	169
8.4 The untrustworthy children and youth at the 'bottom'	171
8.5 The ghetto—the antisocial fabric	173
8.6 The social construction of the 'middle'	175
8.7 The construction of the imagined members of the imagined community	177

Part IV. The Contemporary Challenges: Vicious and Virtuous Feedback Circles

9. Public Opinion towards Integrative Policies	183
9.1 A 'rationalistic' feedback model: trust and collective memory	185
9.2 An emotional feedback-model: the social construction of the 'bottom' and our moral judgements	188
9.3 The institutional feedback in deservingness discussions	191

Contents

9.4 Trends in support of anti-poverty policies in the US, UK, Sweden and Denmark	194
9.5 The punitive turn and public opinion	196
9.6 How public opinion stabilizes the high-trust and low-trust environments	199
10. Increased Ethnic Diversity: A Threat to Social Cohesion	201
10.1 Ethnic diversity and its negative impact on trust—an American or general effect?	202
10.2 Ethnic diversity and its negative effect on public support for anti-poverty policy—an American or a general effect?	204
10.3 The American and European out-group perceptions in comparison	206
10.4 The strength of the link between out-group perception and trust	211
10.5 The strength of the link between perceptions about out-groups and support for anti-poverty policies	213
10.6 Increased ethnic diversity and the feedback on trust-environments	217
11. The Ability to Overcome Out-Group Perceptions: Face-to-Face Interaction Revisited	219
11.1 The potential of face-to-face interaction—revisited	221
11.2 The experimental data	223
11.3 ‘Treatments’ and trust: the contingent effect	225
11.4 ‘Treatments’ and support of anti-poverty policy: a contingent effect	229
11.5 The chances of meeting ethnic out-groups: the importance of housing segregation	232
11.6 The trust environments and the ability to overcome ethnic divides	234
12. Social Cohesion: A Process of Construction and Deconstruction	237
12.1 Towards a general theory of changes in social cohesion	248

References 251

Index 261