CONTENTS

Introduction	ix
Chapter 1: Why 'subject' is a grammatical concept	1
1.1 Aristotelian assumptions	1
1.2 Aboutness	5
1.3 Pivots and the semantic prominence of subjects	8
1.4 The structural nature of the subject	18
1.5 Conclusions and directions	25
1.6 Appendix: some theoretical preliminaries	27
A. Syntax	27
B. Theta-theory	29
PART I: THE SYNTAX OF PREDICATION
Chapter 2: The grammatical theory of predication	35
2.1 Theoretical issues	35
2.2 The structure of the theory	40
2.3 Small clauses	49
2.4 A classification of syntactic categories	54
2.5 Grammatical predication	60
Chapter 3: The syntactic properties of subjects	66
3.1 The distribution of pleonastics	66
3.2 Pleonastics and case	73
3.3 The Extended Projection Principle	76
3.4 Passive and raising	78
Chapter 4: Predication as a thematic relation	84
4.1 Theta-roles and predication	84
4.2 DP traces and predicate variables	89
4.3 Predication and movement	97
4.4 Appendix: VP internal subjects	98
Chapter 5: The syntactic forms of predication	100
5.1 Introduction	100
5.2 Predicate absorption and complex predicate formation	102
5.2.1 The process of absorption	102
5.2.2 Degree phrases	107
5.2.3 Predicate absorption is a syntactic relation	110

5.3	Inflection, IP and predication	113
5.4	Inflection, I', IP and subjects	118
	5.4.1 The syntactic position of subjects	118
	5.4.2 The Extended Projection Principle revisited	120
5.5	Primary and secondary predication	122
5.6	Adverbs	128

PART II: THE SEMANTICS OF PREDICATION

Chapter 6: Interpretation		133
6.1	Assumptions	133
6.2	Interpretation	136
6.3	How this works	140
	6.3.1 Simple clauses	140
	6.3.2 Passive	142
	6.3.3 NP-raising	144
	6.3.4 Small clause complements	145
	6.3.5 CP predicates	145
6.4	Adjunct and absorbed predicates	147
	6.4.1 Secondary predicates	147
	6.4.2 Predicate absorption	151
	6.4.3 Resultatives	154
6.5	Subcategorised predicates	156
6.6	Inflection in English	163
6.7.	Comparisons	163
	6.7.1 Dowty's (1982) theory of grammatical relations.	163
	6.7.2 Chierchia's property theory	162
Chapter 7: The semantics of pleonastics		168
7.1	Formal interpretation	168
	7.1.1 Pleonastics and a theory of subjects	168
	7.1.2 Interpreting pleonastics.	170
	7.1.3 Pleonastics in property theory	177
7.2	More about full interpretation	179
	7.2.1 Pleonastics are just ordinary pronouns	179
	7.2.2 Non-theta-marked lexical subjects are possible	182
7.3	Object pleonastics	187
	7.3.1 Theoretical predictions	187
	7.3.2 The constructions	188
	7.3.2.1 'it' + an adverbial quantifier	188
	7.3.2.2 'it' + CP	193
	7.3.2.3 Dislocation structures	197
7.4	Remaining questions	199

PART III: THE SYNTAX AND SEMANTICS OF COPULAR CONSTRUCTIONS

Chapter 8: Predication structures in Modern Hebrew identity constructions	205
8.1 Introduction	205
8.2 The data	206
8.3 Analysis	212
8.4 A note on eyn	221
8.5 Semantics	229
8.6 Greenberg's (1994/1997) analysis	231
Chapter 9: Copular constructions in English	235
9.1 Copular constructions and predication	235
9.2 Two verbs 'be'?	237
9.3 One 'be' + type-raising.	238
9.4 Against predicate raising analyses of identity sentences	250
9.4.1 The predicate raising approach	250
9.4.2 Details of the theories	253
9.4.3 Solutions	259
9.5 Some discussion about predicate nominals	266
PART IV: THE COPULA
Chapter 10: The meaning of 'Be'	273
10.1 The problem	273
10.2 A more detailed look at the data	277
10.3 The agentive 'be' solution	283
10.4 Verbs and adjectives	288
10.4.1 The theory	288
10.4.2 The data	289
10.4.3 The representation	293
10.5 Be and the mass/count distinction	295
10.5.1 Be	295
10.5.2 A comparison between the mass/count distinction in the nominal and verbal domains	301
10.6 How a derivation works	315
10.7 Selectional restrictions	316
10.8 Aspectual classification of ' be + AP'	319
10.9 Agentivity effects with be in small clauses	326
10.10 Agentivity effects with be in the progressive	329
10.11 Some loose ends	335
10.11.1 Progressive be vs copular be	335
10.11.2 be in identity sentences	335
10.11.3 Adjunct predicates revisited	336
10.11.4 A note on Hebrew adjectives and possible cross-linguistic variation	337
