

Contents

Preface	xi
Acknowledgments	xv

Part I. Experience Formulated and Unformulated

1	The Given and the Made: A Constructivist View	3
2	Unformulated Experience: An Introduction	33
3	Familiar Chaos: Unformulated Experience as Defense	51
4	Creative Disorder and Unbidden Perceptions: Unformulated Experience as Possibility	65

Part II. Reconsidering Self-Deception: Toward a Theory of Dissociation

5	Imagination and Creative Speech: Thoughts on Dissociation and Formulation	85
6	Not-Spelling-Out: Dissociation in the Strong Sense	113
7	Narrative Rigidity: Dissociation in the Weak Sense	129

- 8 The Problem of the Private Self: Unformulated Experience, the Interpersonal Field, and Multiplicity 147

Part III. Unformulated Experience in the Work of the Analyst

- 9 Interpretation and Subjectivity:
A Phenomenology of Resistance 163
- 10 The Analyst's Unformulated Experience of the Patient 185
- 11 Gadamer's Hermeneutics: A Philosophy for the Embedded Analyst 203
- 12 Courting Surprise: Unbidden Perceptions in Clinical Practice 235
- Notes 257
- References 267
- Index 279