

Part One

Beyond the painterly plane: architectonics and the Suprematist philosophy 10

24 Conquering volume: "absolute architectonics, without any practical use . . ." 12

- The difficult conquest of the virtual volume 19
- The birth of the "forming element" 24
- In student hands 34
- The action of the plane creates the volume 49
- Solely to create beauty . . . 60
- The end of idealism or verticality perverted 64
- Liberating the volume 72
- Malewicz's architectons leave the studio 86
- Elaborating a "Suprematist Order": toward a "new classicism"? 97

25 Surveying the world from the pinnacle of art 114

- Overcoming the dialectic of opposites 118
- The siren songs of the absolute 124
- The fifth gospel 130
- "And the time came when religions changed . . ." 136
- "The perfection of the world is the perfection of man . . ." 141
- "Attaining zero as a neutral axis, as a moment of absolute harmony . . ." 144
- The Zero manifesto: a textual Quadrilateral 147
- Reaching the stage of the definitive "formula" 152
- Searching for "systems of interrelations" 156

26 Return to darkness: European recognition and internal exile 162

- Fear of the "last painting" and of creative freedom 176
- A didactic example: Byzantine iconomachy 180
- Berlin's decisive role as a crossroads 186
- Malewicz's disappointed Polishness 192
- The Berlin accolade 210

Part Two

Post-Suprematism: A symbolic redefinition of the painterly figure 226

|           |   |            |           |  |            |
|-----------|---|------------|-----------|--|------------|
| 27 | The quest for a “new image of man”  | 227 | 29 | Ora pro nobis Domine                | 336 |
|           | The “revolutionary” cloak of the negators of modern painting                | 236        |           | Ecce Homo                                  | 340        |
|           | “A condensation of form without recourse to imitating nature”               | 239        |           | Taking leave of the “Grand Liturgy” of art | 350        |
|           | The new image: “Collecting interlacing forms into a superior concentration” | 243        |           | Epilogue                                   | 360        |
|           | The subject considered as an element of form                                | 250        |           |  |            |
|           | Sub speciae aeternitatis   | 257        |           |  |            |
|           | Toward the “new image”  | 265        |           |  |            |
|           | Regarding “the hierarchy of images”   | 272        |           |  |            |
| 28 | Painting silence  | 290 |           |  |            |
|           | Struggling with the “proletarian” inquisition                               | 292        |           |  |            |
|           | “The blockade is tightening all around”                                     | 302        |           |  |            |
|           | Confronting the state’s imposture   | 308        |           |  |            |
|           | The “dream of a contemporary classicism”                                    | 313        |           |  |            |
|           | The last portraits, a final attempt at immortalizing                        | 321        |           |  |            |
|           |   |            |           | Index                               |            |
|           |   |            |           | List of illustrations                      | 364        |
|           |   |            |           | Index of names                             | 374        |